"I feel like a two-year-old after a Palmolive Shampoo. It is as necessary as a bath."

"My hair is so much prettier after a Palmolive Shampoo—I would love to take one every day."

PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO

Contains the same wonderful palm and olive oils that make Palmolive Soap so cleansing, softening and nourishing to the skin

Millions of men and women are using Palmolive Soap—because they like it.

PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO makes a delicious lather—thick, creamy suds—even in the hardest water.

It does not stick to the hair, but is rinsed out immediately with a dash of clear, clean water.

PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO makes the hair so alive and fluffy that it seems twice as thick as before. It preserves the youth and color of the hair, and makes it soft and tractable.

It gives to hair the soft, misty gleam that healthy, clean hair has by nature.

It delights everyone with the fresh, healthful tingle imparted to the scalp.

Practical Sports Clothes

V 87.—Raincoat of finest translucent Japanese oiled silk which may be worn as a bad weather motor or sports coat, because it is not bulky. With sou'wester hat, $25. Damson, sea green, brown and amber.

V 89.—Imported Angora sweater wonderfully soft, light and warm. Price, $15. The matching tippet is $5, and the becoming skating cap $5. White and colors.

V 88.—Double-breasted English Altcar coat with loosely belted back and big patch pockets. A splendid motor topcoat. Made in rough English Whitneys and mixtures. $55.

Which Have the Merit of Being Smart

NO weather is too disagreeable for the English sports-woman. In drizzling rains she is out on the golf course, as well as on the days which hold more than the mere promise of frost. But she is sensibly dressed on these occasions, yet with that distinction which characterizes the English woman wherever she may be.

Such practical sports clothes are to be found in the Motor Shop of the Wanamaker Burlington Arcade. They are not copies of London models but are the English garments themselves with the indescribable British distinction.

Newest among the coats which include the Balma-caan, the Inverness, the Aintree and the Conduit, is the double-breasted Altcar (illustrated), an excellent type of English coat. Its long, straight lines, slightly full back and smoothly set-in sleeves, give it a masculine look which is part of its charm. The double-breasted Aintree, another new English coat, has the seam straight down the back instead of the panel effect of the Altcar. They are both $55 and are of smartest kind of English fabrics.

Japanese oiled silk of the finest quality, has been used for the raincoat (pictured). It is on the order of a fisherman's "slicker," but so fine and soft is the translucent material, that the garment is not clumsy or cold and thick to wear, and has the effect of merely veiling the coat which it covers. Because of this lightness these coats are much worn by sportswomen who like to golf or tramp or motor in bad weather. The colors of these oiled silk coats are, because of their translucence, unusually beautiful; they include a deep sea green, an amber brown, rich damson and a pale, golden wine color.

JOHN WANAMAKER—NEW YORK

How Ten Dollars from You Will Help to Secure A Million Dollar Bequest

By the will of Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, the Philharmonic Society of New York will receive $500,000—a bequest whose value will increase in a few years to probably one million dollars.

This bequest is made on condition that the Society shall enroll one thousand members, each of whom shall pay a membership fee of $10 a year. Read the particulars below:

THE Philharmonic Orchestra is too well known to need description. It is the oldest orchestra in the United States, and one of the best. The eighty-four concerts which it gives each year perform an incalculable service in extending the public appreciation of fine music.

Among the distinguished leaders of the Philharmonic have been such men as Theodore Thomas, Anton Seidl and Gustav Mahler.

By spending $10 now, you can help to bring the Philharmonic Orchestra a legacy of One Million Dollars, placing it henceforth on an absolutely safe financial foundation.

What a Thousand Members Can Do

For the past three years, the Philharmonic Orchestra has suffered an annual deficit of about $85,000. This loss has been made up through the public spirit of a number of Guarantors, who have personally contributed the large sums necessary to keep the Orchestra in existence. This guarantee fund has now expired.

But thanks to the farsighted generosity of Mr. Pulitzer, the need of a similar fund can exist no longer, provided simply that the Society can gain one thousand Annual Members.

One thousand members, paying the nominal sum of $10 each per annum, will secure for the Philharmonic Society a bequest whose value will soon amount to one million dollars.

Privileges of Membership

For these members will be given two private concerts each winter, at which selected compositions will be presented in advance of their public performance. Members will be sent tickets for these private concerts without extra charge.

The support of one thousand members means that the present high standard of the Orchestra will be maintained. These members, through a board of directors, will have absolute control of the affairs of the Philharmonic Society. Were the Orchestra completely endowed, with its managers absolutely indifferent to public opinion, it might easily deteriorate into a lifeless affair. Foreseeing this, Mr. Pulitzer took the precaution to prevent it by insisting that the Society shall have one thousand active members before his bequest becomes available.

The new Philharmonic Society will thus stand upon a safely democratic foundation. It will become more and more influential in the development of musical art in New York, and in the various cities to which it goes on tour each year.

How to Become a Member

Every lover of music is warmly invited to become a member of the Philharmonic Society and thus help secure its bequest of One Million Dollars.

The maintenance of a really fine orchestra in New York is a cause that every public-spirited man or woman should be proud to join.

The Philharmonic Society, as already explained, has vacancies for one thousand active members, each of whom will contribute $10 a year—or a larger sum if the individual member so desires. To you, as a reader of Vogue, the Society offers one of these vacancies, counting upon your support at this moment when new members are so urgently required.

This is an extraordinary opportunity—undoubtedly the first time in the history of music when by spending so small a sum as $10 annually you can influence the disposal of a million.

If you love good music, and if you want to support and help control the most meritorious musical society in New York, you will at once sign and mail the following Membership Blank.

THE IDEAL PRESENT IS THE ONE YOU MAKE YOURSELF

CHRISTMAS GIFTS from VOGUE PATTERNS

No. 2215.—Dutch cap of allover lace trimmed with Cluny insertion and ribbon. Tiny wire holds the shaped edges in place.

No. 2218.—Semi-fitted princess corset cover and knickerbockers which could be made of fine batiste embroidered by hand and trimmed with lace for less than $4.

No. 2217.—Irish crochet or cluny lace may be combined with linen or a firm satin to make this attractive brassiere.

A BREAKFAST cap, a matinée, a lace or crêpe de Chine petticoat or even a charming bit of lingerie is just the sort of Christmas gift one girl likes to give another, providing it is a bit different; and VOGUE patterns are unusual. They are easy to follow and the results are assured. Here are some examples of what VOGUE patterns will save you in making gifts.

The attractive new breakfast caps illustrated would cost anywhere from five to ten dollars in the shops, yet you could make them for less than half; or better yet, from bits of lace and silk you may have on hand.

A French fancy in petticoats to wear with evening dresses is the skirt made entirely of shadow lace over crêpe de Chine. Such a garment would make an attractive gift and certainly one out of the usual. This would be almost impossible to buy. It could be made by pattern No. 2216 at a cost of twenty-three dollars.

The slim silhouette can only be gained at its best when equally slim underwear is worn. Here is a combination corset cover and knickerbockers seamed to fit smoothly over the bust and hips. It opens in a practical way down the center front. Sheer French batiste with insets of lace and some fine hand work would make an exquisite garment and cost but three dollars and sixty-five cents.

The short matinée may be made of crêpe de Chine trimmed by a shadow insertion and fine hand-run tucks. The beauty of such a garment is in its grace and this is particularly lovely. In the shops it would cost twenty dollars and upward, whereas your cost would be six dollars and twenty-five cents.

Brassieres were at first merely practical garments. Today French ingenuity has made them of satin and lace. Either of the models shown here would make dainty gifts: they could be made of linen and Cluny lace or of satin and Venetian lace. Though of such lovely materials the cost would be under five dollars.

No. 2216.—Petticoat which may be made of crêpe de Chine with ruffle of shadow lace or with complete overskirt of the lace.

No. 1665.—Any one of the garments in this complete baby layette would make an attractive Christmas Gift. The complete set; price 50 cents.

Patterns for these designs on this page are 50 cents each. Sizes: 34 to 40 inch bust measure; 22 to 28 inches waist measure. Full material requirements come with the patterns.

No. 2220.—Boudoir cap in an unusual style. Fine net, ribbon and plaited lace edging make a dainty combination.

No. 2221.—Crêpe de Chine, shadow lace and fine hand-run tucks could make this most charming of matinees. With a Vogue pattern it could be made for about $7.

No. 2219.—A tight-fitting brassiere which may be made of fine linen and Cluny lace—a practical garment which may be extremely dainty as well.

A Maker of Boxes for Children

MRS. ADELINE W. RAMAGE came to New York eleven years ago. Wishing to turn her artistic ability to practical use, she formed a connection with a large Fifth Avenue Specialty Shop. For this shop Mrs. Ramage designed various attractive novelties for children's and grown-ups' parties.

After several years of success with this form of work, Mrs. Ramage decided last June to go in business for herself and to confine her efforts to the making of attractive bags and boxes for children and children's parties.

After six months' experience in her own business Mrs. Ramage writes us as follows:

MANAGER "SHOPPERS' & BUYERS' GUIDE"
VOGUE, New York.

October 25th, 1912.

Learning from several successful advertisers that Vogue leads all other magazines reaching people of taste and refinement, I decided to place it on my advertising list, together with several other magazines of the highest class.

Results from VOGUE have been satisfactory as well as surprising. Of the several magazines used as a test, I find that the great majority of orders and inquiries have come through the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide" of VOGUE.

My advertising in VOGUE to date has cost $67.45 and from it I have received $470.65 worth of orders.

695 St. Nicholas Ave., New York.

When we hear of "fortunes made through advertising" we often think that these fortunes were made almost instantaneously. We remember how the miner suddenly uncovers a nugget of gold, how the Wall Street speculator grows rich in a day! But advertising is like neither of these. We know of no case of success won through advertising which did not come gradually, and even slowly.

We feel that Mrs. Ramage has made as much success through VOGUE as the extent of her advertising warrants. Anyone with good merchandise to sell can expect an equal share of success.

We tell this story simply as an everyday instance of the results advertisers in this department are getting.

Old Dominion

The New Colonial Pattern

VIRGINIA BORN. It is said that no woman of the best Virginia blood can be ignored. You may love her or hate her, but you cannot overlook her.

One says the same thing of old Virginia silver. Its possession is the hall-mark of its owner.

Our Old Dominion represents a study of the Colonial plate of the best blood of Virginia—the Virginia of Washington and the Revolution. In its lines there is the distinction of birth, the refinement of breeding, the dignity of Southern aristocracy.

The pattern is offered complete—Dinner, Tea and Dessert Services—knives, forks, spoons and fancy individual and serving pieces.

Obtainable only from leading jewelers, and protected by the Gorham trade-mark on each piece.

YOU must be a very contrary person if you cannot find in the next VOGUE a welcome gift for every friend on your Christmas list.

In this number you will find jewels and furs fit for an Empress—if you have an Empress on your list. You will find fifty or more gifts selected particularly for the man who secretly scorns the average run of Christmas presents. You will find something for the schoolboy, for his big and little sister, and for the new baby. And you will find several things which the woman who has seen seventy Christmases will really appreciate.

You will do the men of your house a real favor by letting them read the

To the Little God of Thinness, Plump Hand-Maidens Daily Sacrifice Comfort, Health, and Comeliness that They May Emerge Purified from the Flesh

B y A N N E R I T T E N H O U S E

THE century-old, unanswerable question has been, "Which of you by taking thought can add a cubit to his stature?" The one now substituted is, "Which of you by taking thought can detract an inch from her circumference, or a pound from her avoirdupois?"

Shylock, tearing his hair to devise some means of obtaining his pound of flesh without losing a drop of blood, is a less tragic figure than the modern woman in her frantic endeavor to lose a pound of flesh without creating a single wrinkle. Briefly, it is a pons asinorum problem; but it isn't a bit polite, is it, to call any process that relates to dainty, lovely woman a "bridge of asses"?

As the world has wagged, women have been pitted against men in their follies; each sex had its own way of making a fool of itself—seemingly in order to give conversation and argument a chance to flourish. Now the sexes have joined in their absurd worship of the idol of Thinness, and so, on that supreme topic, they let each other alone. Daily they offer their plump bodies as sacrifices to a god of torture that they may emerge purified from the flesh.

In the days that are done, men and women fretted over a wrinkle, agonized over a gray hair, wept over the decline of youth's crimson flag in the cheeks. To-day they prefer all of these defects to a curve. They care not that nature never intended the human animal to be cast in a straight line. A fig for nature, they say; a crown of gold to him who flattens us out. And because a fool is born every minute and two charlatans are born to fatten on his foolishness, the cry against flesh has been heeded, and cures for curves have sprung up like those amazing mushrooms, breakfast cereals.

It is a serious-minded world to-day. Women are marching with banners on which are inscribed high-sounding and well-meaning phrases such as "The Abolition of Child Labor and Sweat Shops," "Eugenics," "Control of the Ancient Evil," "Votes for Women," "An Eight Hour Work Day," and "Down with Graft"; but, if along the line of march of that righteous parade there were erected a booth bearing the magic sign, "All Stout Women Made Thin," the banners would be trailed in the dust while the bearers stampeded the charlatan who cried out an ancient phrase in a new dress: "Rest your mind upon a green leaf for four hours a day and you will lose forty pounds. Ten dollars, please."

It is not necessary to work these days to make a living. Just substitute some absurd new method for an old truth, bring out a skeleton to uphold the contention that thinness is easily obtained, appeal to fashionable women—and you are rich; but it is well to make money while the sun of fashion shines on you, for even at nightfall you may have a rival.

All over the world stout women are stumbling over fearsome paths with blisters on their feet, following a Pied Piper of Hameln who flutes to them of a magic land of emaciated women, for, bless you, the emancipation of women is as nothing to the emaciation of women! Verily, it is as the acorn to the oak.

fat and laughter. These were Falstaffian virtues to be emulated.

To-day our women are serious, and to play the part, they must be thin. So they seriously hold a potato in one hand, a knife in the other, and as they peel, they pirouette. One, two, three, left foot, right foot, swirl, peel! Can't you see it? All in a row, with faces puckered and joints creaking, and perspiration pouring. Well, at any rate, the potatoes are peeled for luncheon, and the two cooks and the two scullery maids have time to read the latest novel, "Fat: Or How She Lost Her Husband's Love."

Mind you, not only the plump people go in for this fantastic performance, but hundreds of young matrons who wish to escape the curse, do this fantastic potato peeling under the name of fancy dancing. Soon they expect to cook a whole luncheon, set the table, and make the beds while they chant in chorus, "One, two, three, left foot, right foot, swirl." If they confessed the performance to their husbands, there would burst upon the economical male mind a great light. "Bravo!" he would say, and discharge the cook as superfluous. But even if woman is fat, she hasn't lost her cunning.

Another piper pipes to fast. One must not eat, is his advice, and this is the most serious fad of all, because on it hangs much that the doctor and surgeon must undertake when the piper finishes. For some reason, probably old as Adam, the tempter offers an apple as a cure. The victim is told that she can keep entirely well and lose all superfluous flesh if she will eat an apple for each meal and drink barley water to make up the deficit her stomach craves. Victimized and victimizer recite a wonderful line of philosophy about this—cant, jargon, all of it, but the piper is cunning, and she is under an hallucination. They expound that theory about our all eating too much, overloading that sensitive organ the stomach, being gourmands when we should be refined epicures; they repeat all that half-baked learning about tribes who fight for months on a diet of rice and dates, or philosophers who wrote the world's literature on one banana per diem. This talk goes joyously on until the talker fades into another world where ghosts are fashionable, or, coming to her senses, falls ravenously upon one full grown meal and goes about the next

And what do these pipers pipe? Oh! the laughter of it. "Pirouette while you peel potatoes," is one piping. No, this is not a lesson in alliteration. It is a serious performance, indulged in by hundreds of properly brought up women, women who in other walks of life have a sense of humor, but who dare no longer laugh because in their childhood they memorized that fatal copybook sentence, "Laugh and grow fat." In the days of copybooks, you see, the world was rather fond of

THE THRONE-ROOM OF VANITY

WHAT is more essentially feminine than an exquisitely appointed boudoir? Though absolutely French in origin and conception, the boudoir has been universally adopted, and the word has been embodied intact in many languages with a sort of hopeless acknowledgment that no fitting translation exists. There is no room that lends itself better to the whims and extravagances of the fashionable woman, nor one which she takes greater delight in furnishing. So much of her time is passed there that this is hardly to be wondered at. The boudoir is the scene, not alone of mere dressing, but of all the artistic last touches—a loose lock caught into place, a bow twisted a bit more gaily, a pat here, a poke there, until at last the portrait is completed. It is this room which is the atelier of the modern beauty, and certainly no studio of famous painter has ever produced more adorable visions of loveliness than have these same abodes of beauty.

DAINTINESS AND PERSONALITY

Nothing is too choice, too costly to use in the adornment of the boudoir. There are two distinctive effects to be produced, two important principals to be adhered to—daintiness and an atmosphere of personality. It may be rich, but it must be dainty, and it must have that intimate air of personality without which, sumptuous though it may be, it becomes but a salon, or sitting-room of elaborate formality.

The Boudoir Is the Room of Rooms That Lends Itself Best to the Costly Whims and Extravagances of the Fashionable Woman of To-Day

The Frenchwoman knows to the full the value of taking life luxuriously in the morning. Until noon each day she is to be found seated in her lounging robe, reading her notes, answering them, and receiving her friends. From the days of sumptuous Versailles down, the French bedroom and the boudoir have been the scenes of informal receptions. To-day France lacks the crowned head, and so the custom has been adopted by lovely mondaines, who hold their petit matins in this not unconventional manner. In this room their fancy for ruffles and frills runs riot. Innumerable are the soft, downy cushions, lace coverings, and satin quilts thrown on the couch or chaise longue to increase its comforts.

A GLIMPSE OF A BOUDOIR

A charming glimpse of a boudoir is shown in the interior illustrated above. The walls are paneled in an opalescent silk called "Mille Raies" or "thousand-rayed" silk. The woodwork is painted a delicate shade of pearly gray—a tint dear to the Frenchwoman who wisely realizes its wonderful effect as a background. The curtains at the windows are of fine white net with over-curtains matching the paneling of the walls. Bits of old mahogany are scattered here and there—a table with some rare volumes, a curious writing desk, a screen of gold embroidery that lends sumptuousness by its wealth of color. But the center of interest lies beyond a doubt in the graceful chaise longue upholstered in dull blue velours and filled with the wonderful lingerie pillows. There is an inviting air of rest, of intimacy, and of charming personality in such a combination of comfort and luxury.

Reflections of this perfectly appointed room are caught in the mirrors set in the French doors. A slender table, on which stands a jar of roses, is placed within easy reach to hold books or work or to support a lamp. Everything, even to the soft yet most efficient lighting, is arranged to make the hours of relaxation the pleasantest and therefore the most beneficial. Here the forenoon may be spent in the relaxation necessary to keep the beauty given by the gods, or gained by the most persevering efforts.

"CHAISE LONGUE" COMFORTS

In the boudoir of the woman of fashion in America are to be found these same lovely feminine conceits. She takes from the old world, and especially from beauty-loving France, whatever will add to her charm. The chaise longue cover illustrated at the top of page 21, shows Gallic ingenuity in the combination of embroidered batiste and real laces. These, tinted by time or art to a rich ivory, are placed over a pink silk lining. Garlands of small French flowers form the trimming and border the deep flounce of net appliqué. Nothing more exquisite of the sort can be imagined.

The pillows shown with it are as charming. One is square with the cover of fine real laces, net appliqué, and tiny French flowers. To these are added delicate bands of ribbon work, and big bows of pink satin ribbon placed in each corner. More unusual is the crescent-shaped pillow. This is of fine, embroidered batiste trimmed with bands of delicately hued ribbon and French flowers. The ruffles are of shadow lace in keeping with the fairy-like tracery of the embroidery.

PILLOWS WITH FUR AND CHENILLE

As though lace and ribbon were not sumptuous enough, one of the season's new pillows shows fur, and another displays a soft chenille trimming formed into roses which rival the real ones in depth of color and softness of texture. The first, shown below, is an oblong pillow of heavy, real laces with a strip of net lace down the middle. This is outlined by antique gold galloon braided like a heavy chain. Fur trims either side and is caught at the ends under a gold braiding, from which depend ball tassels of lace covered with the gold galloon. Instead of the usual pink or blue lining a soft red in keeping with the character of the pillow is used.

A cross between the almost barbaric splendor of this pillow and the daintiness of these on the chaise longue, is the oval one shown on the right of the former. Heavy thread laces are combined with shadow meshes, and placed over a pink satin slip. The entire edge is encircled by roses and foliage of chenille, in the deeper shades of old-rose, American beauty, and leaf green. Chenille is newer than ribbon for forming flowers and has great depth and beauty of coloring.

BOUDOIR BIBELOTS

The lamp for the boudoir should have just as much individuality as that for the drawing-room. Some of the most charming have the base or stand of French gilt, with the shade of filet lace in keeping with the boudoir pillows. Though it may be infinitely rich, it must first be dainty. Like the boudoir itself it must suggest an inviting informality.

Other articles which are seemingly trifles have their practical uses concealed under silken covers. A dainty little lady of the French Court hides under her wide-spreading, hoop skirt a useful work-box with separate drawers where needle, thread, and thimble may be stored away. A similar lady diffuses a soft light; another, with a frivolous smile and careless mien, ingeniously guards a jewel case.

To take the place of the more formal leather desk set, brocaded silk and tapestry are fashioned into the daintiest of writing accessories. The desk itself may be entirely of French tapestry with the appearance, when closed, of a table rather than a desk.

And so it goes; each article in the room has the same all-pervading daintiness. Here, too, some delicate piece of rare porcelain, jewel-like cloisonné, a bit of carved ivory, a curio from the orient—each is in its proper setting. The vases for flowers, the golden baskets for plants, all have an air of unaffected luxury.

THE PARISIENNE RETURNS TO PARIS

Theatres are Opening, the Grand Prix has Taken Place, and the Festive Winter Season, With Chic Woman Omnipresent is Getting into Full Swing

White fox and sable is a smart fur combination

THE mild weather and the glorious sunshine of the autumn days lent a most festive and springlike appearance to the Paris streets. The boulevards were lined with fall-blooming marionniers, flaunting their tender green leaves and spikes of snowy blossoms in the face of approaching winter. The first violets of the winter season purpled the streets, and heralded the return of the Parisienne to her city.

The opening of the Autumn Salon which marks the beginning of the winter's art exhibitions was, viewed from every standpoint, most interesting. The rotunda was lined with all sorts of gorgeous panels, wall-papers, draperies and cushions from Martine's. To the initiated, this is really Paul Poiret exploiting his fondness for strong, rich color and bold design, through the medium of his "Martine" shop on the Faubourg Saint-Honoré.

At this exhibition the impressionists and the cubists have full sway. After I had reviewed gallery after gallery, the thing which stood out most vividly in my mind was a painting of a large green dog, three bright green children, and a small pink child against a background of the Basin in the Luxembourg Gardens. A prominent position was given to a large canvas by an American woman, Estelle Rice, that, while it is not by any means a fair sample of her work, yet it is most decorative and pleasing.

POLAIRE OF THE SLENDER WAIST

Theatres are opening, the Grand Prix has taken place and everything is getting in full swing for the winter season. At Réjane's theatre, Mlle. Polaire has made her first appearance in "Les Yeux Ouverts," which promises to be a great success. Mlle. Polaire is the proud possessor of the most slender waist in Paris, and all of her frocks are made to emphasize that fact. Buloz has shown it very cleverly in the smart frock of amethyst velvet which she wears in the first act and which is illustrated in the lower, right-hand corner. The narrow velvet skirt wrinkles slightly at the waist-line and ends in a short, narrow train. The semi-transparent, tulle-lined flounce of Chantilly gives a smart finish at the bottom of the skirt. The corsage is of white chiffon. A wide scarf of filmy white tulle bordered with skunk hangs like a curtain from the shoulders and is caught up at the knee on the left side of the back with a jet ornament. The top of the scarf is drawn across the bust in a fichu-like drapery which disappears under the top of the skirt. Polaire's short, fluffy hair is bound with bright-colored bands of silk.

A GOLDEN GLORY OF A CROWN

The revival of "La Robe Rouge" at the Théâtre Porte-Saint-Martin with Vera Sergine as Yanetta and Jean Coquelin in the rôle of Vagret, drew a large French audience, and was the occasion of a great display of jewels. Vera Sergine showed remarkable dramatic ability, and the entire audience paid tribute in tears. For the first time in my life, I saw both men and women weeping shamelessly in public.

One of the prettiest gowns in the audience is illustrated in the lower, left-hand corner of this page. It is an exquisite combination of gold brocade, gold cloth, fur, and lace. The narrow underskirt of gold cloth with the lower edges prettily curved overlaps in front to show the white silk stocking and the black velvet slipper. A wide, full flounce of Alençon partially hides the underskirt of gold cloth. The square train of yellow brocade, about eighteen inches wide at the tip, is bordered with sable. At the knee it widens and is drawn around the figure at the high waist-line, almost overlapping in front. When the wearer walks the train falls gracefully loose from the body of the skirt. The bust is banded with a wide piece of sable, with just a bit of Alençon peeping out at the top. White tulle crosses the shoulders and is held by small pearl ornaments; the loose ends are fringed with pearls. A large red silk chrysanthemum with long, curly quills tipped with yellow is worn at the high waist-line directly under the right arm. A blond young woman who was wearing a simple frock of black velvet carried one of these monstrous, scentless flowers in her hand. Truly, an esthetic touch.

THE PIQUANT "MOUCHE"

While waiting for my carriage I caught a fleeting glimpse of a most charming face, half hidden behind the large collar of white fox which topped a mantle of brocade. The dark hair was dressed rather high, with the customary fringe over the forehead. The word "fringe" is most expressive for this bang is only a fringe, never heavy enough to conceal the forehead, though it may be so long as to touch the eyebrows. The short, fluffy tuft of white paradise rising from a band of pearls was posed directly in the middle of the forehead, a decidedly unusual placing. A large mouche was posed high on the right cheek. High on the cheek, about an inch below the

To add just the right touch of piquancy to her toilette, the chic Parisienne sticks a tiny mouche under her right eye

As the possessor of the most slender waist in Paris, Mlle. Polaire has her frocks made to emphasize that fact outside corner of the eye—that is the correct place for a mouche just at present. And if one happens to have blond hair, the effect is all the more startling. As can be seen in the old portraits, the mouche was in the heyday of its popularity during the latter part of the seventeenth century. Portraits of the Duchesse de Chartres show mouches of assorted sizes worn in clusters all over the face, and the famous portrait of the Duchess of Newcastle shows a coach and four in this black court plaster. By the side of such extravagances as these, the mouche of to-day is a very modest little affair, for it is only about the size of a lady-bug. While it is not commonly worn, it is very popular with certain smartly dressed women.

Muffs wax smaller and smaller, and some, as here, look surprisingly like live animals

Utterly unlike any of its predecessors is this suit with its tiny jacket and full, barrel-like skirt

VARIETY AT LONGCHAMP

Three distinct and totally different styles in dresses, hats, and muffs, which appeared at the recent Longchamp races, are illustrated on this page. The frock at the left shows the long, straight line which so many people are loath to abandon. It is developed in black velvet with a trimming of skunk. The narrow, straight skirt hangs from the top of an invisible belt and is bordered at the bottom with an eight-inch band of skunk. It trails on the ground in the back (I specify the back because some of the skirts trail on the side) and in the front is curved to the shape of an inverted U to show a pair of small, velvet-shod feet. The velvet coat is short and square, with rounded front corners and long, tight, set-in sleeves. The coat is absolutely untrimmed, except for the shawl collar of skunk. With this suit is carried a skunk muff in the large, flat shape which belongs to the slim silhouette. The sleeves are plain at the wrist, which allows the arm to slip well into the muff. The large hat of black velvet rolls up from the face on the left side. On the right side is posed a large, black ostrich feather which droops over the edge of the brim.

The middle figure in the same group shows a modishly draped skirt and a most original muff. Brocaded faille in the color known as "ficelle" is used for this costume. As everyone knows, "ficelle" is the color of unbleached cord—a smart color just at present. The suit is trimmed with natural marten. The skirt breadths overlap in front, and, because of a curious, flaring seam in the middle of the back, and the addition of heavy weights cleverly placed, is made to hang in draped folds. The bottom of the skirt is bordered with a narrow band of marten. The cutaway coat has set-in sleeves, the collar and wide cuffs are of fur. A flat turban of marten sets low on the head and has as its only trimming two long, black paradise plumes. The newest and most original note of the whole costume is in the tiny marten muff, which looks surprisingly like some small live animal. The hands are thrust into shallow pockets which are placed somewhere in the creature's stomach.

The wide band of long-haired fur, which appeared at the wrist of so many of the new coats shown at the recent openings, was really a forerunner of the tiny muff. For a wide band of long-haired fur placed at the wrist makes it quite impossible to thrust the forearm into the large, deep muff, and as many of the new coats are finished at the throat with tight, standing bands of fur, it is likely that the wide, soft scarf of fur is also doomed.

A NEW SILHOUETTE

The figure at the right shows still another silhouette in frock, hat, and muff. This costume is quite unlike any other that has appeared this autumn. It was worn by a smart, blue-eyed Parisienne who was a great success at Deauville during the summer. It is developed in a light-colored, pinkish chestnut velvet, and is trimmed with marten. The round skirt is evenly shirred at the normal waist-line, and is encircled with seven narrow bands of fur, which stiffen it slightly and give it a pronounced, barrel-like shape. In spite of the full skirt, the slender outline is not lost, for the skirt is, of course, petticoatless, and the trim little coat is short enough to show the slender hips. The two bands of marten which trim the lower edge of the coat disappear under the wide marten collar. The muff is fairly small and quite round. The small muffs are, of necessity, carried a trifle higher than the deep, flat muffs, which permit the hands to enter at almost any angle. A smart hat of black silk brocade, a cross between a derby and a sailor, is set low on the head. It is trimmed directly in the middle of the back with a tangled mass of black ostrich feathers.

The paradise tuft hanging over the brim bears a strong resemblance to a tiny feather duster

THE SHARPLY CONTRASTED SLEEVE

Chinese blue zibeline is used for the suit illustrated on the right of the group at the top of this page. The skirt is laid in deep, unstitched plaits in both front and back, but the semi-fitted coat is plaited in the front only and is drawn in at the waist-line by a wide belt of black varnished leather which slips through a cloth-covered buckle. The unique feature of this suit is the black velvet sleeve, which is finished at the hand by a flaring cuff of the bright blue cloth. The same strong note of blue reappears in the rolling brim of the black velvet turban.

Variations of accepted fashions are seen in the cuff frill of malines and the lacing of the slashed skirt

The narrowness of the skirt of this black velvet tailor-made is accentuated by the flaring of the coat

On a blue suit appears a black velvet sleeve. The boa ends hang in the prevailing fashion down the back

Two slashes, one on either side of the front to give freedom to the train, now make their appearance

A long boa of white fox is drawn close under the chin, and the long ends almost touch the bottom of the skirt in the back. All boas, whether long or short, are worn in this reversed fashion.

AN ARTISTIC COLOR SCHEME

A most artistic color scheme is used in the evening gown by Tollman which is illustrated on this page. It is of a greenish turquoise satin with touches of dull gold embroidery. The straight lines of the narrow skirt are broken only by the two crosswise plaits at the knee, which lift the skirt slightly at the foot. The skirt is slashed at each side of the front to give a certain freedom to the train. A drapery of violet chiffon falls from the bodice in front and back in pleasing lines. The bodice is of satin embroidered in gold, and gold embroidery stiffens the outside edge of the wisp of tulle which crosses the shoulder.

SMARTNESS IN TAILOR-MADES

THE UBIQUITOUS TAM O' SHANTER

The two chic hats illustrated on page 24 I saw at the Hotel Ritz last night. The one is a narrow-brimmed, close-fitting, high tam o' shanter of black velvet with a fringe of white paradise hanging over the band of satin which encircles the base of the velvet crown.

At present the smartest hats are developed in black velvet, which is universally becoming. Aigrettes no longer look smart and are now being superseded by the softer paradise feathers. The tufts of these feathers which were placed so perilously close to the edge of the brim two weeks ago, have finally fallen over the edge, and now hang suspended from the underside of the brim, as will be seen in the illustration on page 24.

In striking contrast to most of the tam o' shanters, which are oblong and rather high, this one is quite round and flat, and puffed like the Latin Quarter beret. Mounted in a ball of cut jet is a small tuft of black paradise feathers which hangs over the right shoulder, looking for all the world like a tiny feather duster.

An elaborate draping of the skirt

FRENCH DESIGNERS DELIGHT TO SHOW THAT THE POTENCY OF THEIR ART RESIDES NOT SO MUCH IN CLEVER INVOLUTION AND ELABORATION AS IN AN UTTER SIMPLICITY WHICH ACHIEVES DISTINCTION BY SOME TOUR DE FORCE IN THE TREATMENT OF LINE, COLOR, OR MATERIAL

Worth raises to the status of a veritable creation the most unpretentious of black satin frocks by draping across the bodice the fragile beauty of a Chantilly lace scarf. It hangs straight across the front where it outlines the square décolleté bodice, and is held to the waist-line by a black velvet strap. In the back it hangs triangularly to a puff in the skirt. Triangular is the décolleté neck and triangular also the arrangement of the black velvet ribbon

Ratines in checks and narrow stripes play an important rôle in Bernard's street suits. This "Monaco" model shows a skirt of black and white check ratine and a black velvet coat with waistcoat and rolling collar of plaid ratine. The skirt consists of two circular pieces which overlap at the left side of the front and at the right side of the back; the edges are bound with black velvet. The circular fullness of the skirt is laid in shallow plaits from the hip to the knee

THE BEAUTY OF PERSONALITY

SOCIETY, with its innumerable conventionalities, too much represses self-expression. There are so many rules by which we must talk, walk, gesticulate, glance, or refrain from all these that we are all molded, at least on the surface, to a great sameness. For fear of offending against some of these rules, we refrain almost entirely from self-expression. Therefore is society denied much entertainment, and therefore is it often a dull and boring thing. Now, if instead of crushing the individuality that is in us we would develop that part of it which is likely to prove attractive to our fellow-beings, we would be more entertaining and entertained. In our present state of dwarfed personality, few people make even the slightest attempt to develop what latent possibilities of entertaining they have.

EXCEPTIONAL are those who even so much as cultivate the voice. This is a thing, unfortunately, that is not taught with any success to the mass of students in schools and colleges; private instruction is necessary, yet it more than repays the effort and expense, for often a man or woman with a fine voice will command attention even when what they say is of small value. One of the most distinguished men of this country, whose admirers are numbered by the million, owes no small part of his ability to arouse enthusiasm and sway the opinions of thousands to the fact that his voice is of marvelous beauty. Of course, it is not possible for all to develop musical speaking voices, but it is at least possible for all without serious physical defects to improve the natural voice so that it does not have the nasal or grating quality which Europeans have rightly criticized in us. The power of intelligent opinions expressed in well-modulated tones is great, and the wonder is that the women who have so much time in which to do nothing but make themselves attractive, do not spend, well, as much time as they do on their hair or complexions, in developing so great an asset of personal charm as a musical voice.

NOT only the voice but the diction, the delivery, the gestures should be considered. These things seldom come of themselves. A few gifted people speak well, tell a story or relate an incident in an attractive way; most people do not. But a little training, such as an actress goes through years of, would make anyone "une belle conteuse."

AND why not? Why should not every one who attempts to tell a story, tell it well? Of course, the training that make one stagey or stilted is as much to be avoided as an awkward dumbness, but there is little danger of that in this day of dramatic realism. Watch one of our best actresses give a short exposition in a society play. Is she stagey?—or stiff?—or over-mannered? Not at all. She does only what any well-poised, interesting, charming woman would do in a drawing-room. If any normal young girl were given this training she would soon acquire her ease, her grace, above all, her art of self-expression. There is the young English girl in "Fanny's First Play." She has a speech, awkward in length, in which she tells her mother of her arrest and her days and nights in prison. And how easily, how vividly, how just as a young girl who had experienced it would, does she tell it.

ANOTHER neglected means of self-expression is singing. To this the native American especially is indifferent. It is a national domestic tendency to force the young daughters of the family to undergo several hours of daily torture at the piano. Custom rigidly prescribes this musical formula for the girl of all classes, even though she may not have the slightest natural gift as an instrumentalist; but an attempt to develop her singing voice is seldom made. There is no reason why almost every human being should not be able to sing well enough to give pleasure to himself and others. Training for concert or opera is not necessary any more than school compositions imply taking up literature as a profession.

THEN there is dancing. Why should that be regarded as exclusively the prerogative of youth? It is a healthful and delightful form of recreation and physical culture that has come down from antiquity. There is no valid reason why the older generations should not indulge in it as well as the younger. There is nothing at all chimerical in this suggestion, as it has been found by actual experiment that wherever public opinion sanctions the dancing of the elders they have very enthusiastically taken it up. Wisely indulged in, dancing develops gracefulness of carriage and adds to the gaiety of nations.

TO-DAY it is only the exceptional person who gives himself an all-round personality through the development of all his powers. And the few who do cultivate mind and body so as to be pleasing to others, regard the results as accomplishments of which they are more or less vain. The ability to do a variety of entertaining things well should not rank a person as a phenomenon nor as a professional entertainer; rather it should be the quite usual equipment of every one who counts as a social entity.

Democracy, Potent in Society as Among the Masses,
Is Evidenced by the Many Social Cliques and the Absence of a Single All-Powerful Social Leader

IT is not easy for a writer to be original and it is not altogether safe to stray too far from beaten paths. I might begin by announcing, "Here we are again—just at the threshold of the season," or I might employ once more the well-worn allegory and to allude to the play about to be produced, or drag in by the ears the "Pagliacci" prelude and announce that "the comedy has begun." You will always find this neat if not altogether bran new comparison in the little introductions written by writers on fashionable topics, who very naturally like to have a little fling at literature before they enter into the rehearsal of the chaplet of debutante teas, dances, dinners, the Horse Show, and evenings at the opera.

If I were speaking of plays—I suppose I should remember that I am not—but if I were, I might begin, "The play is about to commence"—Thackeray did this deliciously in "Vanity Fair" seventy-five years ago—"the last bars of the overture are being sounded," or worse yet—"The violins and wind instruments with weird screeching and humming and doleful rumblings are being tuned preparatory to rendering the 'Chocolate Soldier' or the 'Lustspiel' or the 'Bohemian Girl' overtures."

Perhaps this is an unseemly digression, but even as a child I always relished this overture to the play. I delighted in getting to the theatre early, in sniffing the gas and odd smells, and having the usher bang down my seat with a report like a revolver. And what delight there was in watching these strange beings come out from some mysterious subterranean region, and in listening to this odd, discordant orgy of sounds. What kind of persons could they be, these fiddlers and these instrument players with their greasy evening clothes and their meek subservience to that magnificent personage, the leader, well groomed with the blackest of coats and newest of gloves?

And now we are to abolish orchestras in many of our theatres and employ some mechanical device or have no music at all between the acts. I confess that the theatre orchestra was a relic of a barbarous age and that it is not needed now except in the most lurid melodrama to play creepy, shaking, tuneless tunes which begin and end nowhere during the thrilly moments on the stage. We are too sophisticated to need this stimulus to our imagination, just as we are too knowing to admit asides, soliloquies, or even conversations or monologues at the telephone to give us a key to the action.

DISCORD IN THE SOCIAL ORCHESTRA

But where am I bringing you? I must keep to my straight and narrow path. However, my wanderings have suggested a theme.

At the beginning of the season, the social orchestra is apt not to play in harmony, for at such times society may lack a leader. Our full orchestras are abolished. They are split into numerous little bands, playing two and three at a time, or following one another, as they do in the ballroom scene of Mozart's "Don Juan." But if harmony is to depend on a leader, we need never hope for it here. New York society cannot have a leader. It lacks such a personage even at that home of the concentrated essence of fashion—Newport.

Certainly Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish did no more than her duty as the hostess of a large establishment, and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt gave only one splendid ball. Our last great leader was the late Mrs. Astor, and for some years before she passed away, her leadership was simply a legend.

This lack of a chief executive much surprises our cousins from over the water. They wonder how we can go on without a court and someone to reign over us. Mr. Ralph Pulitzer, in his brochure on society, gave a doleful picture of fashionable women being driven to absolute boredom and despair because they could all equal each other in the display of their gowns and their tiaras, and because there was no final Court of Appeals where they could assemble and be judged and smiled upon by one Superior Being. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish has threatened to leave New York and go to Washington, but although social conditions are delightful there, one cannot reckon upon the mistress of the White House taking the place of an American sovereign.

THE QUEENLESS COURTS OF EUROPE

All this is only the progress of democracy, which works, also, in other nations. There is no one grande dame in Paris who is arbiter. People would have us believe that a certain duchess still retains this power, but that is nonsense. It is said that in Berlin there are three distinct sets, one for the Court with its bourgeois hours and its last century practices, another which gathers around the chic Crown Princess, and yet another, composed of the old families, which refrains from associating with either of the others.

To-day it is not as much of a disgrace as it was twenty-five years ago to have the Court of Austria fail to recognize social position and deny entrance within its sacred portals to certain people who have not the desired number of quarterings. And in the next reign there will be even greater changes. Women are presented at Buckingham Palace in London and men kiss hands and curtsy at St. James's. The English are conservative about some of their traditions, and besides these "courts" and "levees" bring money to the tradespeople. Then, too, there is a reverse of the medal to be considered when we talk of British characteristics.

Although it is a far cry from the "Court Circular" to the "Saturday Evening Post," I would like everyone to read that most clever paper written by John Corbin in that periodical on "English Standards of Gentility." Over here, we have not these standards, but we think in figures and we measure people according to their hundreds of thousands and millions.

Royalty, to return for one second to the subject, is somewhat at a discount in fashionable London. One can give a smart ball over there without having a single royalty present. So much for leaders. There will be none in New York.

THE RESURRECTION HORSE SHOW

Any how, what will be done during these two months? The Horse Show? Some years it is extremely fashionable and in others it is under the ban. We have so many neighborhood shows these days which, being for the most part in the open, are far more exciting

SOLVING the RIDDLE of the NEW COIFFURES

NOTHING is more important to the appearance of the well-groomed, well-dressed woman than the arrangement of her hair. A coiffure that is at once becoming and à la mode is often so difficult to achieve that many cling to one style year after year regardless of changing fashions. This is a great mistake, for often what one considers becoming is merely a question of habit, and a change once made is often found to be preferable to the former mode. The choice of hat and the choice of a coiffure are closely related, for a smart hat or a modish ornament never accords with an antiquated arrangement of the hair. Full well does the Parisienne know this, and never does she hesitate to change. If puffs are worn she pins them on at every angle and wears a hat to show them off; if simplicity is ordained, nothing is more severely plain than the arrangement of her glossy, loosely undulating locks, and by some subtle adaptation her features accord with any style decreed to be the latest.

ARTFUL SIMPLICITY

This year, extreme simplicity prevails. Knots are pinned low at the back and the ears are almost concealed beneath the waving masses; parts, curls falling over the neck, low pompadours, and

A Practical Exposition of the So-Simple-Seeming French Coiffures Now the Mode, and Some Excellent Advice on Hair Grooming by a Fashionable Hair-Dresser

The twist of the true "coiffure casque," of which there are several more elaborate variations, is held simply by a comb bangs, are the distinctive features of all the very newest coiffures.

In general, the hair is drawn in broad, undulating waves close to the head; there is often no shadow of a knot, for the long ends are artfully concealed and held in place by a wide comb of tortoise-shell or horn studded with precious stones, which is placed with the wide part lengthwise to the head. The reversion to a simple, natural type would seem to make the aid of the hair-dresser unnecessary, but those who try to arrange the hair on these simple yet subtle lines find that an art is concealed therein, and that never has there been more crying need for the crafty assistance of "monsieur le coiffeur."

Does this simple hair-dressing mean that false hair is no longer necessary? Unfortunately, no, because we are not all Mélisandes, and long and thick tresses are not as common as in the days of fairy princesses. But at least we may render thanks that the obvious wearing of false hair is no longer the mode; now we conceal it beneath our very own and we must admit that if cleverly done it is much easier to achieve a pretty arrangement by means of detachable hair than to twist and pull our own locks into certain prescribed forms never intended by nature. Transformations are so fastened as to cover the entire crown of the head and form a firm foundation to which the loose knots of the back hair are caught; then the invisible French twist may be securely pinned, or the long ends puffed and fastened in such a manner as to give the attractive depth of line to the profile.

The subtleties of the so-simple-seeming new coiffures can be learned. By studying the little sketches on this page a clear idea is obtained of the foundation of the several arrangements shown in this article. The first drawing shows the preliminary steps. The hair, after being loosely waved, is parted in the middle. The hair on the crown of the head, or its equivalent in the shape of a transformation, is firmly knotted. Over this is drawn first the left side, which is fastened on the right; then the right side is drawn smoothly over to the left where the long end is tucked under and held in place by two jeweled pins. A curly bang may soften the line of the brow.

The illustrations on page 33 and the one at the top of page 35 show two other variations of the "coiffure casque." In the first, two views of which are pictured, the simple French twist is hidden under a few large curls pinned close to the head. Below is the most generally accepted interpretation of the coiffure casque which requires the twist to be held by a single long comb. On page 35 a slight change is made in the apportioning of the hair. The front part extends back from the forehead only one inch, and above it is left a square space of hair that is not used with the two side strands, but is kept separate. The rest of the hair at the sides is drawn back and twisted under as usual; then the extra top piece is drawn back and tucked into the twist. An extra comb is stuck in lengthwise across the crown of the head. The present tendency toward the pointed Greek silhouette may be emphasized by adding a projecting ornament at the back of the head.

SEEN ON THE STAGE

The preliminary steps in arranging the "coiffure casque"

Here the French twist is secured in two places with jeweled pins

The coiffure when finished

It is a style of hair-dressing that causes much comment and mystification among the feminine half of the audience. Apparently the swirl is without beginning or end, and yet— Well the hair is divided into three sections, the two front ones parted on one side—say the left, as in No. 1. The back portion is drawn up to the top of the head and the long end turned under as in No. 2. Then, as No. 3 shows, the right strand is brought low across the forehead, rolled softly over the right ear, and swirled around the head to the left ear where it is pinned. Now comes the tricky part, which is sketched in No. 4. The left strand is puffed over the left ear and caught under the same shell pin that holds the right strand secure, and is then drawn flatly to the right, joining the swirl and disappearing under it near the right ear, where it is fastened by another pin.

FANCIES OF THE FRENCH COIFFEURS

Mlle. Cécile Sorel of the Comédie Française is one of the famous patrons of the well-known Paris coiffeur, William Cuverville. For her he has designed a coiffure consisting of a low pompadour with bang, and loose puffed knot pinned at the nape of the neck. From one side of the puff a long curl escapes, falling over the shoulder with two shorter curls pinned close to the head on the side. Both Cuverville and Auguste Petit announce that these curls are to be the distinctive feature of the coiffures of the season. The middle sketch at the bottom of page 36 shows a pretty arrangement by Monsieur Petit. Curls run from either side of the short bang, cover the ears, and fill in the space between the low puff of the back hair and the nape of the neck. It was Monsieur Petit who launched the powdered coiffures at the races, a style, by the way, which he does not think will take, but which is appropriate for this particular form of hair-dressing.

CARLIER'S SHAPED BANDS

For evening wear, fillets of rhinestones and pearls encircling the head and finished at the side by a sweeping heron aigrette, sometimes pressed into the curved shape of the osprey, are much seen. Shaped bands of velvet beaded in brilliants, as shown in the Carlier model to the right of the above described coiffure, are also popular. This style combines the oriental form of low hanging ornamentation with the modern adoption of the aigrette. Carlier uses here a wide band of dull, salmon pink velvet outlined heavily with strass; a stiff, black, aigrette shoots out almost at right angles from the side. A broad loop of the strass droops low over the center of the forehead and large tassels hang over the ears.

ALWAYS THE GLITTERING RHINESTONE

Nothing is prettier than the combination of black and brilliants for evening wear, two examples of which are shown at the top of page 36. In the middle drawing a great butterfly, formed of a black heron aigrette with body and long, quivering antennae of rhinestones, is lightly posed on one end of the fillet of brilliants which starts from either side of the front and encircles the back of the head. The right sketch illustrates a great heron aigrette pressed into a curve at the end like an osprey that sweeps down over the shoulder; at its base is a small bow-knot clasp of rhinestones, pinned erect to the hair.

This posing of the ornament at the side or at the back is characteristic of the new styles. The nearest approach to the front position that is permissible is seen on the Petit coiffure shown at the bottom. This consists of a rhinestone fillet ornamented at each side by long, pointed leaves of yellow tulle outlined and veined with strass which stiffens them just sufficiently to allow of their being bent to the curve of the head. A wreath made of four of these tulle leaves, encircling the head from either side of the front band of rhinestones, and worn so low that the long points practically cover the ears, is another form of the same arrangement which Monsieur Petit considers to be even more graceful than the one shown.

Polaire, though she is possibly too original and pronounced to count as a factor in styles, is wearing in her new play a most striking coiffure which, since it comes from Carlier, is worthy of mention. Two bands of rhinestones run in parallel lines around the head, and hold erect in the back a row of tall, salmon-pink aigrettes which stretch almost from one side of the head to the other. Though chic, it must be confessed that this gives the wearer somewhat the aspect of an Indian squaw.

THE EVENING TURBAN

The use of elaborate turbans with décolleté gowns is still much in vogue. The sketch in the upper left-hand corner of page 36 and the one directly below it show two of Carlier's newest models. The first is a mite of a cap made of fulled pink and black tulle around which runs a six-inch double plaiting of the tulle. This plaiting is caught just a little above the top and bottom edges by narrow bands of old-gold passementerie which holds the plaits in place at the center, but allows the fullness to escape at the edges in pretty, rippling folds. The cap is worn so low over the face that all that can be seen from the side is a tantalizing mass of gauzy ruffles.

The tendency to elongate the line from nose to crown of head is emphasized by the addition of an ornament

Just at the side of the back is posed a bow of the tulle, so big and broad that it is like the sails of a tiny craft.

The second bonnet is made in the form of a toboggan cap of black velvet, with the long point drawn down and caught at one side under a band of heavy openwork; a dull gold

PIERRE'S EXCELLENT ADVICE ON DYEING THE HAIR

We need only to express conversely the classical query, "To be or not to be?" to have touched on one of the most burning feminine questions of the day—"To dye or not to dye?" Really the spelling of the word with an "i" or a "y" makes very little difference; the meaning is practically identical to any truly feminine mind. So at least thinks the ageing woman of twenty-five who, panicky, holds her first gray hair in her hand.

Pierre, a New York coiffeur, has much good advice to give on this so important subject.

"Perhaps," he says, "this stage of getting gray is really worse than that of being gray, for all-gray hair is becoming to many, whereas the indiscriminate mixture is always trying. But this period of transition is hard to bear, and most women would avoid it at any cost. With some, of course, it is a moral question, like rouging or the use of false hair. This phase of the matter their hair-dresser cannot presume to settle. But to those who have settled it in his favor he can give good advice.

TO DYE OR NOT TO DYE?

In the first place, hair can be dyed satisfactorily if it is properly done. Hair that turns white has lost its coloring matter. All so-called restorers are just hair dyes, mostly of the "slow-but-sure" variety. These the hair-dresser tries to make his customer believe are tonics which are slowly "restoring" the hair to its natural color. In reality they are dyes, and worse than the instantaneous kinds, for they are usually sticky and they rub off. The same is true of henna mixtures and pastes, especially the paste which is little used here but is quite generally in use on the continent. It is extremely destructive, for it contains one of the most harmful dyes, whereas henna used alone is not only harmless, but really beneficial to the hair. Unfortunately it can be used only on medium and dark hair, for it produces a color shading toward red, and is therefore impossible for white or light hair. The only resource of blondes is to use a dye from a reliable firm and to have the first application made by a specialist.

There is much to be said for and against hair dyes—and it is said. Those who have a dye to sell naturally proclaim it harmless, whereas many women whose hair has been spoiled by these same dyes pronounce them all bad. The truth of the matter is that there is no really harmless dye which does not wear off. Most of them after two or three years' constant use either break the hair or turn it an unnatural color—an ugly copper red or a blueish or greenish shade. Some of the inferior dyes sometimes affect the eyes and cause headache or skin diseases. There are, however, a few good hair dyes—about in the proportion of one to five to the harmful varieties.

THE DYE OF DYES

The best dye on the market is one invented about twelve years ago by a Parisian chemist. It is now being used by all leading hair-dressers in Paris and London. In commercial New York, however, not a few hair-dressers refuse to use this dye, simply because it is much more profitable for them to make one after their own prescription.

But it is not enough to have a good dye. In addition the work should be done most carefully and scientifically by one who knows the procedure perfectly, and the retouching of the hair as it grows out should be done by the same specialist. It is a most difficult piece of work, and one which requires the experience of an expert.

Bleaching the hair is by no means so difficult a task, nor, when properly done, is it at all harmful, but if overdone it breaks the hair and gives it an ugly straw color. Usually bleaching is resorted to only when the roots of blond or medium brown hair are much darker than the mass of hair. In bleaching, as in dyeing, it is advisable to employ a specialist.

SHAMPOOING DRY AND OILY HAIR

The best way to shampoo the hair is with an ordinary soap, such as Castile, cut in pieces and boiled. Borax and ammonia are bad as they are too drying; even green soap is too strong. The less soap the better. People with thin or dry hair should never use soap at all, but in its place the yolks of eggs and lukewarm water—nothing else. For very dry hair which is coming out, a little sweet oil applied to the scalp is excellent, but the best hair food of all is castor oil. This should be used with a tonic—about the proportion of a tablespoonful of oil to eight ounces of tonic. This prevents the oil from making the hair sticky.

For oily hair the only treatment is to wash it once a week with the yolks of eggs—no soap. Besides, it needs plenty of fresh air, and so should be allowed to hang loose at night before retiring and in the morning. If the ends are brittle or stringy they should be cut.

Nothing is as good for the hair and scalp as massage. It stimulates the circulation of the blood, which in turn restores the natural oils, keeps the hair soft and glossy, and the scalp free from dandruff. Brush the hair systematically every day with a hair brush that is perfectly clean; then after the hair has been carefully and thoroughly brushed, smooth it with a piece of soft old silk. This is a modern fad, but it makes the hair shine."

"The sweetness of summer when summer is gone"

DRESSING the face is indeed an art, since it requires painstaking effort and study on the part of women born fair as well as those who must do for themselves what nature has omitted to do. A constant regard for detail is imperative, for well do we know the woman who, though beautifully gowned, permits her hair to be dressed without thought of the effect, and sees without dismay the reflection in her mirror of straggling strands of hair that fringe the face and hang over the collar, who is careless of rough eyebrows, and permits her complexion to be without the bloom which comes from the continual use of carefully selected toilet preparations and the tonic effects of the daily warm or cold bath.

THE MIND BACK OF THE FACE

Dressing the face does not necessarily mean rouge and powder, but it does mean that exquisitely finished appearance which the French call bien soignée and which other women crave as an individual expression of self-respecting, bodily care. A well-cared-for face is really an expression of mental harmony and perfect physical order—the acknowledgment that the face as an index of thought demands as much if not more care than that bestowed upon exquisitely fashioned gowns or daintily manicured hands. Moreover, the conveniences of modern civilization place such careful grooming within the reach of every woman.

The Greeks gave the most careful attention to their baths and to the rubbing of the body with oils and unguents; with them the carriage of the head, the poise of the shoulders, the set of the chin, the way the hair framed the face, were all a result of thought and training. The modern wise woman will not forget this, since the Greeks formed for us our standards of beauty.

LEARN OF THE WOMAN OF FIFTY

Occasionally, at the theatre perhaps, is seen a woman of fifty or more whose shoulders and neck are perfect in line and have retained to a marvelous degree the soft, creamy tints of youth. And what does this charming effect proclaim? Effort and eternal vigilance.

Dressing table completely equipped with every minute essential of the toilet

A powdered beauty aptly ornaments a box of scented powder

Such a woman satisfies the eye of the beholder, and if she has gained from the experiences of life, she adds to the preservation of her girlish beauty the charm of a mature individuality. She radiates an inner satisfaction that she is well presented and that no neglect or haste has allowed her to go before the world unfit.

COIFFED BECOMINGLY AND MODISHLY

Without slavishly conforming to the hair-dresser's models, the fashion of wearing the hair should come within the prevailing mode, for there is nothing that so completely marks one as démodé as the adherence to a bygone style. It is better for the hair, too, if the manner of dressing it is changed occasionally. If the hair is worn low, care must be taken not to wear it so low that it accents a possible heaviness of the chin; it should be brought up far enough to suggest the oval of the face, but it must not be so high that it broadens the head to a square.

Beautiful effects are secured by devotion to the mirror; not a single mirror which shows merely the face or the head when partially turned, but a triplicate mirror, which gives a view of the head and face at any angle. Set in a good, clear light, the three-fold mirror will serve as a true friend to any woman. It will show a disarranged coiffure, an ungracefully pinned veil, or a badly joined collar.

AT LAST—THE COMPLEXION

After the hair is arranged, the complexion is the next consideration. Blemishes that mar should be obliterated with the aid of the specialist and the preparations of the toilet table.

Of course, the well-bred woman does not copy the crude effects and glaring necessities of the stage, but she looks to see if a sleepless night or worry has left her with a dull, pasty look, if her eyes are shadowed, her lips drawn. The world must not know her private griefs or troubles, so from one of the silver-mounted or enamel-topped boxes on her toilet table she takes a rose-tinted cream and rubs it well into her cheeks to supply the color temporarily absent; then she massages her eyelids gently with finger-tips; she smoothes away the lines about her mouth with a soothing cream, and touches her lips with a bit of rose lip-salve; last of all, a delicate, clinging powder restores her temporarily lost bloom. If she has previously plunged into a cold bath or slipped into a hot one, as she likes best, she feels even more refreshed, mentally as well as physically. Many women go through this process every day before going out on the street, and immediately on returning home the accumulated dust and grime are removed with soothing creams.

All this sounds artificial. It is. But life in the city, all social life, and even the city itself, is artificial, and demands that we live up to it. Our clothes and our houses are the products of artificial living; therefore we must dress the face to be in harmony with our environment.

But rouge pots and toilet creams, except the most simple kinds, are not taken to the woods or the camp. There nature tones up the complexion, brightens the eyes and freshens the hair and body. There we dress according to our surroundings in outing costumes, "sports coats," as the English always call our sweaters, and even face powder is unnecessary.

MIND OVER MATTER

There is one thing, however, that every woman should frankly recognize, and that is the effect of time on the features, unless they are carefully guarded by the mind. The nose is apt to thicken, the eyelids to droop, the mouth to sag and grow heavy, unless these things are prevented and controlled from within. Every one of these sad developments is due to mental sluggishness and indifference, and to an over-indulgence in rich food and drink. But if the inspiring enthusiasms which make for youth and keep thought alert are cultivated, the features will, to a large extent, take care of themselves and will respond to a vigorous mind as does wax to the hand of the modeler.

FEEDING THE SKIN

From time immemorial oils and many kinds of vegetable and animal fats have been used as preservatives for the skin, but none are more efficacious than the best of modern creams. These are of great variety to meet different requirements, and no well-equipped dressing table should be without at least two, and generally three kinds. First, there is solid cream, and of this there are several excellent makes, including one put up to order. This latter is of the purest ingredients and exquisitely perfumed with orange flowers. It costs $1 for a very large jar. Another more generally known, very excellent cream comes in tubes at 35 cents.

As a cold cream, pure and simple, nothing is better than a delicately scented, dewy-mixture which sinks into each pore of the skin, whitening, healing, and cleansing all at once. Such a preparation is of great value in every-day life, and when it is entirely of vegetable ingredients and largely mixed with the juice of cucumbers, it will be found more refreshing than the softest rain water after a day in the open. The best means of application are the fingers; the subsequent wiping away may be done with pieces of soft, fine linen. The price is 50 cents for a small jar.

Next among cream necessities is one for massage and tissue building. Those who like a special formula individually prepared and pure will be glad to know of such a cream at $1 a jar. Another excellent preparation can be purchased in smaller jars for 50 cents. This also is made entirely by hand and contains olive oil, almond oil, the essence of a water herb, and still another ingredient for building up wasted tissue.

Besides the two varieties mentioned, many find it necessary to rub a thin layer of protective cream into the skin as a basis for powder. For this purpose nothing better can be recommended than a French preparation at 75 cents, which is not only a protection to the skin in extremes of weather, but retains the powder without becoming greasy. There is also a paste for the hands, to prevent chapping and keep the skin fine, a cream to eradicate wrinkles and a so-called "beauty" cream—all from the same famous French house, and each worthy of mention.

The purity of face powder is more important than is generally realized, for the bismuth and alkaline properties sometimes included work havoc with any skin. High-priced, but dependable, is an extremely delicate and faintly perfumed powder.

Most toilet powders are richly fragrant of some favorite odor. None is superior to a variety introduced at least ten years ago, which sells for $3.50. Some of the newer offerings are of exquisite quality also; such a one is a captivating and extremely delicate powder selling for $7.50. It is enclosed in a handsome leather case that is daintily lined with white satin.

An astringent of some kind is a toilet necessity, but few may be relied upon. It must be of exactly the right strength and purity, for its important function is toning up the skin, refining the pores, and clearing the complexion. After massaging, an application of it should never be neglected. One of the best of the imported kinds sells at from $1 to $5, depending on the size of the bottle.

A deodorant powder is good for special toilet uses and should therefore be included in a complete outfit. One should be chosen that is without perfume, and can be relied upon not to stain the clothes. An excellent make fulfills these requirements and is most reliable. Price, 15 cents.

BORROWING THE BEAUTY OF THE FLOWER

Last touch of all in the toilet is the perfume. Investigation of the new perfumes discloses a variety of almost equally charming productions, and choice is only a matter of individual taste. Each season the perfumes give forth a riot of new sweet odors. The old-time single-flower perfumes have been largely superseded by bouquet odors, and only occasionally is there found among the novelties a one-odor extract of unusual sweetness. The new gardenia extract, illustrated in the lower right corner of this page, however, is exquisitely rare and merits more than a passing word of praise, for the perfume of this aristocrat among flowers has been so skilfully distilled that the blossom itself is not more fragrant. It is priced at $5.

Poignantly sweet also is the odor of Cape jessamine, a flower of southern climes. This perfume has never before been isolated in liquid form, so that the extract now on the market is a triumph of the distiller's art, and is also one of the most lasting odors ever produced. The bottle in which it is put up is of heavy cut-glass with a gold plated cap; the price is $5.

A delicate, composite perfume with a predominating lily scent comes in a wide, low curving bottle of heavy cut glass, and is stoppered with a square cut-glass knob. This is enclosed in a brown leather case picked out with

THE NEW ART of MAKING PLAYS

THE great Spanish dramatist, Lope de Vega, once wrote a pamphlet entitled "The New Art of Making Plays," and this title seems particularly applicable to the art of the drama at the present time. We are living in a progressive period, when the methods of all our practical and theoretical activities are undergoing a rapid revolution, and it is therefore not surprising that we should find the technique of the drama changing year by year before our very eyes.

BETTER THAN SHAKESPEARE?

A few years ago, the President Emeritus of Harvard made the somewhat startling statement that civilization had progressed faster and further in the last hundred years than in all of the preceding twenty centuries, and that the conditions of life at the close of the eighteenth century differed more from the conditions at the present day than they differed from those which appertained to ancient Rome. Similarly, it may be asserted that the art of the theatre has progressed faster and further in the last thirty years than in all of the preceding centuries that have intervened since Æschylus, and that we find ourselves confronted at the present time with an utterly new art of making plays. In this connection it should be confessed at once that progress is not necessarily amelioration, and that there is always a possibility that a step forward may be a step away from the ideal. In some respects the general life of ancient Athens was better than our general life to-day, for all its practical advantages of telephones and trolleys; and in many respects the drama of Sophocles and Shakespeare was better than the drama of Pinero, in spite of all our present perfectness of craftsmanship. But the student of any art should dally little with such absolute and final questions as that of what is better and what is worse; and he may spend his time more profitably in the modest endeavor of defining differences.

THE NEW CRITICISM

The differences between the drama of to-day and the drama of all preceding periods have not as yet been clearly and emphatically defined to the theatre-going public; and this is the reason why many of the best artistic efforts of our current theatre remain misunderstood and are denied their proper measure of appreciation. In the evolution of any art, creation always precedes criticism, since criticism is merely an analysis of what has been created; and the main difficulty that is encountered by the best practitioners of the new art of making plays is the fact that our current dramatic criticism has not as yet caught up with them. Their new efforts are judged by old standards; and "The Thunderbolt," or "The Pigeon," or "The Blue Bird," or "What Every Woman Knows," are still considered to be something less than masterpieces because, in both materials and methods, they differ markedly from "As You Like It" or "Tartuffe." It is therefore desirable that we should endeavor to enumerate at least a few of the definitive features of the new art of making plays; and this purpose may be most easily fulfilled by setting forth several of the most noticeable differences between the drama of the present and the drama of the past.

In the first place, we should note that, whereas the drama of other days was compounded of only two elements of narrative—namely, character and action—the drama of to-day is compounded of three elements—namely, action, character, and setting. Dramatic incidents which used to be conceived as happening anywhere and anywhen are now conceived as happening at a particular time and in a particular place.

THE NEW ELEMENT IN DRAMA

This localization of incidents in place and time may be noted, in all the narrative arts, as the one feature that distinguishes modern work from that of all preceding periods. In his essay on Victor Hugo's romances, Robert Louis Stevenson pointed out that the one new note introduced into the novel at the outset of the nineteenth century was the insistence on environment as a formative influence on character and a determining motive toward action. But the drama could not cope with this modern philosophical conception of the importance of environment until the great wave of mechanical invention which swept over the world during the middle of the nineteenth century had equipped the theatre with those appurtenances which were necessary to enable it to project the element of setting adequately to the eye.

"Milestones"—The first milestone

But this epoch-making revolution in the physical equipment of the stage occasioned an alteration in the very essence of the drama. In all former ages the drama had made its appeal primarily to the ear, like the arts of poetry and music; but now for the first time it was enabled to make its appeal directly to the eye, like the arts of painting and sculpture. In our own days the art of the drama has ceased to be essentially an auditory art and has ranked itself for the first time in history as a visual art; and this point must be clearly understood if we are to appreciate properly the new art of making plays.

THE MODERN REVOLUTION IN ACTING

For this revolution in the basis of dramatic appeal occasioned a necessary evolution in the art of acting. Whereas acting had formerly been a presentative art, it now became a representative art. The actor had formerly attracted attention to himself, like an orator upon a platform, and always in his work had presupposed an audience; but he was now required to comport himself as if no audience were present, and to treat his particular personality as only a component part of a general stage-picture.

And this alteration in the art of acting required an alteration in the art of writing for the stage. For the presentative actor it was necessary to write rotund, rhetorical speeches which should give him ample opportunity for elocution and the use of sweeping gesture; but for the representative actor it is necessary to write in the terms of common conversation. Any speech that is at all rhetorical will pull the modern actor out of the picture and will shatter that illusion of actuality which is the ultimate aim of the contemporary stage.

From this consideration we derive the precept that the highest exhibition of literary tact that may be achieved by the contemporary playwright is to persuade his audience that he is not employing any trick of literary style. Formerly plays were written in verse or polished prose; nowadays they must be written solely in casual, drifting colloquialisms. People do not actually talk in verse; neither do they talk in formal prose; and it has therefore become the leading literary merit of our latter-day drama to present its dialogue divested of all "literary" turns of phrase.

A GOOD PLAY IS A GOOD PANTOMIME

Actions speak louder than words. This proverb has become an axiom of our new art of making plays. No less an authority than Mr. Augustus Thomas has asserted that every good play of the contemporary type must merely add the element of dialogue to a pantomime that is already good. The modern playwright must rely more upon his visual imagination than upon his literary skill, and must be able to conceive his narrative primarily as a drift of moving pictures.

In this requirement he may be aided greatly by the collaboration of that new and very interesting functionary of the modern theatre, the stage-director of his play. It is the business of the stage-director to co-ordinate the contributions of the author, the actors, the designer of the scenery and costumes, and the manipulator of the lights, into an harmonious work of art. The stage-director is often, in the contemporary theatre, the dominant artist of the drama; and in any critical consideration of a play that has passed through his hands, it is frequently more necessary to devote attention to his artistry than to that of either the actors or the author. Any play, for instance, that has been produced by Mr. David Belasco must be studied as a Belasco play, regardless of who wrote it or of who the actors were.

THE REAL "NEW THEATRE"

These alterations in the materials and methods of the drama have required, in recent years, a corresponding change in the construction of our theatres. So long as the drama remained an auditory art projected by a presentative actor, it could be housed effectively in an ample auditorium, but when it became a visual art exhibited by an unobtrusive actor, it called for a theatre that should gather a selected audience into intimate proximity with the stage.

So long as the spectators were conceived as observers of an action that was different from ordinary life, it was possible to seat them in a huge and disassociating auditorium, but the modern subtle intimacy of appeal demanded a theatre so constructed that all the spectators should imagine themselves to be participants in the play. It became necessary to make them feel that (in the social phrase) they were "among those present" at the action; and the new art of acting, which depended mainly on apparently unconscious gestures and subtle shifts of facial expression, demanded also a decrease in the dimensions of the auditorium. Hence, throughout the last thirty years, our theatres have progressively been diminished in size, until the prevailing type at present is no larger than the Maxine Elliott Theatre in New York. It is a matter of history that the promising project of the New Theatre failed mainly because the edifice which housed the institution was too large to permit of the effective presentation of the prevailing type of the contemporary drama. Very recently an exaggeration of the present tendency in theatrical construction has been evidenced by the advent of the Little Theatre, which is surely more diminutive than necessary. But this current aspect of the craft of theatre-building is one of the points that must be taken into consideration in any critical judgment of our new art of making plays.

It should be evident from these brief enumerations that it is impossible to measure the contemporary drama by the same critical standards that have been applied to the dramatic art of other ages. The very merits of the Elizabethan drama become defects when we observe them from the point of view of the contemporary theatre, and the faults of other-minded periods have been erected into the virtues of our own. In conclusion, it must be stated that the drama of the present is less allied to literature than the drama of the past, and that therefore it would not be fair to judge it by merely literary standards.

IS POETRY DIVORCED FROM DRAMA?

It is commonly complained of our new art of making plays, that it has divorced the stage from poetry, but all that is actually intended in this accusation is that our leading dramatists no longer write in verse. But surely it is only an uncultured mind that considers poetry as synonymous with verse, and regards it as a medium of expression instead of as a mood to be expressed. Poetry, in a large and general sense, may be defined as that solemn, tremulous happiness that overcomes us when we become unwittingly and poignantly aware of the existence and the presence of the beautiful. Poetry, thus conceived, may be expressed through the medium of any art; and Raphael is assuredly no less a poet though he may never have written that fabled century of sonnets. And poetry may be conveyed as fittingly through our new art of making plays as through the rich and resonant medium of Elizabethan verse. It would be futile to deny the name of poet to that searcher of the soul, that revealer of intimate, ultimate realities, the wise and simple Maurice Maeterlinck; yet his dialogue is written in a language that is so utterly unadorned that the ear feels tender toward it. And when Mr. J. M. Barrie makes us aware of "thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears," he does it most frequently in little visual transcriptions in which no word is spoken.

A new art of criticism is required to interpret our new art of making plays. As yet our contemporary creation in the drama is more noble than the interpretation that it has received. This is the reason, doubtless, why so many well-meaning societies are organized for the "uplifting" of the modern stage, and why so few endeavors are instituted for the appreciation of the theatre of to-day. But any age of the drama that is illustrated by the simultaneous activities of Pinero and Brieux and Sudermann and Maeterlinck and Shaw and Hauptmann and Hervieu and Galsworthy is undeniably a great age; and it is therefore the responsible and humble duty of our dramatic critics to teach the general public to estimate it at its worth.

The PAST and FUTURE of the VARIETY-SHOW

IT was Solomon, superabundantly married and therefore in an excellent position to acquire wisdom, who declared that there was nothing new under the sun. This is as true to-day as in the time of the Biblical sage. Wireless telegraphy is only a development of the signalling of beacon-fires which was practised by the Greeks and which they employed to convey immediately to Greece the glad tidings of the fall of Troy; and moving pictures are only an ingenious amplification of the zoetrope of our childhood.

THE OLD, OLD CABARET-SHOW

In like manner, the amusement parks which sprang up all over the United States in the early part of the twentieth century, in imitation of those at Coney Island, bear an undeniable resemblance to the Foire Saint Laurent and to the other fairs of Paris in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

By BRANDER MATTHEWS

The so-called cabaret-shows, prevalent in the larger cities of the United States in the winter of 1911-1912, were hailed as the very latest form of amusement, combining as they did the solid pleasures of the table with the ethereal delights of song-and-dance; and yet

Froissart is a witness that something very like the cabaret-show was known in the middle ages, and Gibbon has recorded its existence at the court of Theodoric, nearly a thousand years earlier. Indeed, the Romans, and the Greeks before them, had employed performers of one sort or another to relieve the monotony of their banquets. Gaditanian dancers were popular throughout the wide realm of Rome, almost two thousand years before Carmencita came from Cadiz to warble and caper at midnight in the studios of American painters just before and just after the guests had enjoyed the refreshments provided by their artistic hosts.

As the cabaret-show is only another form of the well-known "vaudeville supper," it must be relegated to the class of novelties which are not new. And vaudeville itself is only the long-familiar variety-show. It may now be called by a new name, and many of those who do not look behind a label may accept it as a new thing; nevertheless it is very old, indeed. The name "vaudeville" is an absurd misnomer, like so many other terms due to our habit of careless borrowing from other tongues.

There Will Come to the Operatic Stage
Several Novelties, Some in English, a Number of Revivals, and Many New Principals

By PIERRE V. R. KEY

vocal and musical complement. Miss Hempel, too, is certain to appear in several communities other than the one to which most of her efforts will be confined—pleasant news to many.

The American public, constantly seeking novelty, may rise to proclaim these stars with a great foreign reputation; but there is always an element of uncertainty attached to a debut in any country. Sometimes distinguished artists lack some qualities essential to an American success, or offend because of peculiarities which stand as assets in numerous other localities.

The consensus of opinion, however, seems to favor the ability of Miss Hempel and Signor Ruffo to conquer their new audiences. They are at their best, with their resources fully matured. But we never know the full height of an artist's stature until he has been measured by the "all-round" rule. Therefore, it will be time enough to speak the final word of these celebrated visitors after they have been heard in several operas.

In the meantime there are not a few singing principals who have been added to this year's Metropolitan roster, and a conductor, Giorgio Polacco, from whom much is expected. It was Polacco who took Arturo Toscanini's place in the Metropolitan orchestra on the opening night, when the latter was still in Buenos Ayres and unavailable to his American admirers until early December. And it will be Signor Polacco who will share the premier honors and responsibility with Signor Gatti-Casazza's chief musical leader during this season.

"WATCH POLACCO"

"Watch Polacco," said the Metropolitan general manager the day he arrived in America from his summer in Europe. Consequently the critics are watching him—with eagle eye and with ears strained for any imperfections that will serve as an excuse to flay him alive.

The same state of affairs prevails with every new principal—yes, and any old one, too—who sets foot on the historic Metropolitan Opera House stage. They are literally on musical trial before two juries—the critical jury which writes about what happened for publication, and the general public. When both these juries stamp their official seals upon an individual or musical undertaking little more need be said.

FOR two weeks prior to October thirty-first distant rumblings were heard—preliminary signs of an approaching army of musicians making ready for the fray. On that autumn evening the formal launching took place, not, as in previous years, at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York, but in the interior of the Philadelphia structure acquired from Oscar Hammerstein when he relinquished certain rights for a financial consideration. And there Mr. Andreas Dippel's organization swung into action. After this, in quick succession, were presented the musical offerings of many societies, companies, and individuals. Thus awakened to the world of music, we turn to it with our usual question, "What kind of a season, in quality and quantity, is this to be?"

Looming large in the foreground of European artists who until this year have never had their abilities tested by American audiences are Miss Frieda Hempel, the Berlin Royal Opera soprano, and Titta Ruffo, the Italian baritone. The former has been secured by General Manager Giulio Gatti-Casazza, the Metropolitan chief executive, who declares she will make equally favorable impressions in dramatic and coloratura rôles.

MISS HEMPEL AND SIGNOR RUFFO

Signor Ruffo, signed by the Philadelphia-Chicago Company for fifteen appearances at the unprecedented figure of two thousand dollars a performance, is reputed to be the only masculine singer who has ever divided artistic honors with Caruso when both sang in the same opera. This newcomer, it is contended, has a voice almost tenor-like in quality, and his upper tones are said to be brilliantly resonant. Until a few days ago it was doubtful whether New York would have the privilege of passing judgment upon Signor Ruffo; but the indirect effect of public opinion proving strong, Mr. Dippel decided to present the Italian to a Manhattan audience at the single performance to be given there this month. When the Philadelphia-Chicago organization comes to New York again, Ruffo will have returned home. Several other cities, also, will be permitted to hear the new singer and observe the extent of his dramatic equipment, which many feel matches his

"I would rather be physically tortured," remarked a well-known singer just before leaving Europe for this country, "than to pass the ordeal of an American trial; yet it has to be done for the sake of prestige."

Precisely so.

But the audiences of these United States and of Canada and those whose printed opinions are paid for, are fair—often to generosity. Accustomed to the highest quality of grand opera and concert music to be had, they rightly insist upon that which shall conform to the established standard. Usually they obtain what they want.

Miss Lucrezia Bori—not Borgia—is one of the young sopranos who will be heard in rôles of first importance this season at the Metropolitan. Over here we know only that her voice is reported to be fresh, that she is artistically gifted, and pleasing to look upon. She will sing lyric rôles—one of them Antonia in "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," that melodically delightful opera which, though familiar in New York, has never yet been heard at the Metropolitan.

Miss Hempel, on the occasion when Offenbach's music is presented to Metropolitan patrons, will appear in the character of Olympia, the doll. The three parts usually entrusted to one baritone—Dapertutto, Dr. Miracle, and Coppélius—in which Maurice Renaud scored such emphatic success at the Manhattan Opera House under the Hammerstein régime, will be distributed among as many singers.

OUR NEW PRINCIPALS

The tenor from whom most unusual things are expected is Jacques Urlus. Although he has never sung in New York, he was with the Boston Opera Company last year. Expert judges who have heard M. Urlus say he is the typical heroic tenor—in voice, figure, and manner. In German rôles his recognition has been sufficiently enthusiastic to arouse the interest of all who are likely to hear him.

Another tenor whose signature to a Metropolitan contract has been secured is Giovanni Martinelli. This young man is barely twenty-six years old, but Covent Garden has responded enthusiastically to his singing. The London folk who have heard him compare him to Caruso. This would seem to be an unwarranted kindness, for he is not over experienced and his vocal organs can scarcely be at their fullest development.

It is not certain that Signor Martinelli will sing in America this season. If he does, his personality is one calculated to attract, to say nothing of the story of his phenomenal rise to a leading grand opera tenor. As Signor Martinelli was once a wood-carver he may be said to have progressed, a fact that should interest American people, who have shown a fancy for singers who have risen thus spectacularly.

The third new "first" tenor sure to be heard is Umberto Macnez.

Among the other new principals of our most efficient organization are Willy Biers, a German baritone already risen to a place of distinction; Carl Braun, basso, hailing from the same land, and a Frenchman named Eduard Erhard, whose voice is baritone. All the remaining principals who have joined this opera company for the first time are less widely known. By the same token their opportunities will not be so large. Misses Vera Curtis and Louise Cox, sopranos; Stella de Mette and Lila Roebson, mezzo-sopranos, and Paul Althouse, tenor, comprise this group, most of whom are Americans. In spite of the fact that she has had practically no operatic experience, Miss Curtis will probably succeed to the post vacated by Mme. Alma Gluck.

THE PROGRESSIVE MR. DIPPEL

Speaking next of the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company: there is plenty

Frieda Hempel, a soprano in both dramatic and coloratura rôles, is expected to star brilliantly this year

Helen Stanley, an American, is to be one of the leading sopranos of the Philadelphia-Chicago Company of evidence to prove the progressiveness of Mr. Dippel, who is this season breaking his best records. Engaging Titta Ruffo was the cleverest bit of business on the part of an American-working impresario accomplished in several years. But Mr. Dippel has done even more.

He has brought twenty-one new principals to his organization for the 1912-13 season, several with splendid reputations. There is Mme. Cecelia Gagliardi, for instance, the former prima donna dramatic soprano of the Madrid Opera who was chosen by Egypt's Khedive to sing the title rôle of "Aïda."

Miss Julia Claussen, a mezzo-soprano from the Stockholm Royal Opera, is another artist of whom excellent things are spoken. She is an American whose home is Chicago. Before going to the Würzburg Royal Opera House, Miss Claussen sang for several years in New York church choirs.

Ilcilio Calleja, formerly of La Scala at Milan, Leon Campagnola, and Aristidemo Girogini are the new leading tenors. The second has a dramatic voice, and the last a lyric which is believed to be peculiarly suited to Luisa Tetrazzini's. This Italian tenor will take the place of John McCormack, who was usually cast to appear with the diva before he left the Philadelphia-Chicago company a year ago.

Mr. Henry Russell, managing director of the Boston Opera Company, has also pursued the necessary course of supplying for his patrons unheard artists. One of his débutantes is Mme. Edvina, an English soprano, who has sung at Covent Garden and the Paris Opéra Comique. Another is Pierre Lafitte, a French tenor. Under the agreement existing between these three leading American operatic institutions, many of the singing principals of all will be heard in each opera house—a sort of "guest" system.

NOVELTIES IN OPERA

It is no easy task for an opera manager of any one of the Big Three to secure the services of first-class singing talent that has not previously been paraded before the public, but it is infinitely simpler than alighting upon a novelty worth producing. Some impresarios have said that picking a new opera with ear-muffs on is the surest method. Whether or not it is by virtue of this practice, American managers sometimes select a work that deserves more than a single hearing. Signor Gatti-Casazza did last season when he presented Wolf-Ferri's "Le Donne Curiose." Mr. Dippel also scored—though less emphatically from a purely artistic standpoint—with the same composer's "The Jewels of the Madonna."

The Metropolitan executive is not pinning his faith this year to new operas, though a few will be presented. Mussorgsky's "Boris Godounoff," an elaborate Russian work never heard in this country, is to have a première before January first, and in February the "Cyrano," in English, of Walter Damrosch and W. J. Henderson will have its first performance on any stage. For "Der Ferne Klang" (The Distant Bell), by Herr Schrecker, the Metropolitan has the American rights, but it is questionable whether it will be produced this season. In very much the same position are three new Debussy operas and one each by Charpentier, Ravel, Leroux, and Salvayre—all of them the property of the Metropolitan.

Signor Gatti-Casazza will rely for his chief works on his old war-horses the novelties actually pledged for production, and several revivals which, besides "Les Contes d'Hoffmann," include "The Magic Flute," "Huguenots," "William Tell," and "Samson et Delilah," and if he presents these operas as well as possible, no one can find fault.

SARTORIAL PHASES of the PLAY

The Plays Which Are Showing the Newest Gowns and Wraps of the Season — Our Best Dressed Actresses Have Reduced to a Science the Art of Uniting Becomingness and Modishness

SO many of the new plays of the opening season have been dominated by a particular psychological or metaphysical interest that fashion has been decidedly secondary. From the new musical comedies, however, and particularly from those recent successes, "Oh! Oh! Delphine" and "The Woman Haters," interesting object lessons in novel styles may be drawn. The première of the Schnitzler comedy, "The Affairs of Anatol," established the fashion pace—an honor hitherto accorded to the John Drew play of the autumn.

Ann and I have been seeing these new productions together, always, I am a little ashamed to admit, with fully as much interest in the clothes as in the plays. Ann has been summering at Swiss hotels, where she has had unlimited opportunities to see beautiful French, English, and Viennese gowning; so her standard of comparison is illuminating. She knows what is the smart thing of the moment.

"On the whole," said she in appraisal, "the early season has been a disappointment as far as the clothes are concerned—not a single frock that one could copy."

But I insist otherwise.

ARE THERE SMART CLOTHES ON THE STAGE?

"Now, where?" she urged. "Certainly not in 'Fanny's First Play,' nor 'Milestones,' nor 'Little Miss Brown,' nor 'The Case of Becky,' nor 'Robin Hood,' nor 'A Scrape o' the Pen,' nor 'Broadway Jones,' nor 'Man and Superman,' nor 'Little Women,' nor 'The Daughter of Heaven—'"

"Oh, of course, one could not expect the beautiful Loti play to give any new fashion, except that it might prove an incentive to the continued wearing of mandarin evening coats. One must admit that Billie Burke gives us nothing startlingly novel, although she wears one pretty frock of crystal-embroidered net with a diamante and aigrette coiffure ornament, and a lovely, flesh-pink chiffon wrap. But Martha Hedman, the charming Swedish actress in "The Attack," wears several chic gowns. One of steel-blue crêpe de Chine—you remember?—has a straight-hung skirt shirred at a high waist-line. The long-sleeved bodice is untrimmed, save for a Dutch collar of lace, a self-colored cordelière with a single long tassel that hangs just below the waist, and a similar but smaller one that closes the neck. You might copy that."

"Dainty, but commonplace," pronounced Ann, "as commonplace as all of those prelate frocks worn in John Drew's 'The Perplexed Husband.'"

"But there, too, you must except that smart, golden-brown, velvet costume worn by Alice John, with its rounded tunic, surplice bodice, and chamois-colored chiffon scarf. That starts from the shoulder in a unique way, and is caught at the waist and again on the skirt with bunches of purple grapes."

"Nothing new there, dear, but the grapes," declared obstinate Ann. "And Mary Boland, although eccentric, makes a picture in every scene. You see, I depend upon the stage to supply me with novelty, dash, originality. Nowhere have I found those qualities so perfectly expressed as in Florence Reed's costumes in 'The Master of the House.' In the first place, she shows the new silhouette to perfection—that pliable, large-waisted, corsetless appearance—and everything she puts on is invested with her remarkable individuality. Even her simple serge costumes have a new touch at belt or collar. And then that wonderful lemon-colored negligée!"

"One could not easily forget that, with its single Florentine sleeve of green-and-gold brocade, and its one-sided, green chiffon manteau!"

"You see what I mean? It is only with such artists in dress as she and Gladys Hanson—I've not forgotten that lovely white satin and crystal frock of the library scene in 'The Governor's Lady'—that one can look for inspiration from the stage."

"Which reminds me that Teresa Maxwell-Conover wears a striking evening gown in that same act—do you recall it?—a glitter of gold lace, net, and beads, with rose-color glowing through the gold."

"And its curved front slash which middle-back to form the floating train. That was a joy of line and color."

FIVE MASTERPIECES OF COSTUMING

Then there were the five masterpieces in "The Affairs of Anatol." Marguerite Clark's three-piece walking costume of leaf-brown moire took me greatly. Its smart, short coat and long, cut-away tunic were finished at the back with a box-plait panel caught near the hem with self-colored frogs.

"Ah, the new postillion bodice," Ann gives her the appearance of walking through bead portières—yes, I remember."

"You've a rage for the bizarre, Ann. Soon you'll be telling me that you admire the magpie princess gown worn by Jose Collins in 'The Merry Countess.'"

"Well, why not? It is different, at least, and that sharp, diagonal line from the left shoulder to the right hem, separating the black and white portions, is softened by the fantasy of the trimming, and the pendant shoulder cordelière. However, I do prefer the skunk-trimmed negligée of pink pompadour silk with the white ninon angel-sleeve which joins the violet-brocaded panel down the

had remarked as Gail Kane came on in the second episode. We had seen this charming actress earlier in the season in "The Model," and remembered one dainty afternoon frock that she then wore, of accordion-plaited gray crêpe de Chine with a white Robespierre collar and flat panniers tied in front with Bulgarian embroidered sash ends. But this Anatol dress was a new departure.

Her dark-brown velvet skirt was draped diagonally to give a pyramidal front opening which disclosed paste-buckled shoes, and the velvet fichu bodice was finished at the surplice neck opening with silver lace. At the girdle and between the postillion plaits at the back, it was trimmed with dull-blue and silver brocade. A charming feature was the long sash-end of brown chiffon edged with blue and silver galloon, and deeply fringed with brown ribbazine tipped with blue and silver beads, which fell from the right of the girdle. Her coiffure was arranged low, in plaits over the ears.

In the third episode, called "The Farewell Dinner," Doris Keane won the palm for novelty and chic, and her low, smooth coiffure, held down by a jeweled bandeau with Mercury wings, was undoubtedly becoming.

"Observe the wing-like panniers—wired to stand out on the hips," whispered Ann. The transparent pink side draperies were not only wired, but sewed with diamantes on their upper edges. The pale pink satin draped skirt under them opened at the front to reveal a puffed petticoat of flowered gauze, and a short panel of bugled white net ornamented the bodice half way from the V-shaped décolleté neck to the waist-line, where it was held by a crushed ceinture of coral pink. Over this charming creation was worn a transparent wrap of blue gauze brocaded in rose-pink, and made with the pannier drapery.

The woman in the Christmas Eve episode was Katherine Emmet. Her street costume of black velvet bordered with white "mouflon fur," as Ann called it, though I insisted that "marabou" was its name, was quaint and pretty. The white fur also bordered a shoulder-cape of shirred black taffeta, and was set in vertical stripes on a large, matching muff, while a band of it, caught with a pink rose, surrounded her black velvet hat.

Another black velvet costume, this time a ball-gown

One of Mrs. Maxwell Conover's great assets is not manner, but manners

A CRITIC with a kind heart (the thing is not impossible, dear reader!) is often conscious of treating sensitive human persons in an unsensitive and impersonal way, for he has to write about actors, not as persons, but as cogs and wheels in the machinery of illusion. He is not judging effort, but results. He knows the actors often hate him, and he is sorry—and helpless. But in another respect the critics often hurt the players in a way which could be avoided. They neglect to discriminate between good acting and good parts, and the performers of the leading rôles get most of the attention. This is all very well when those rôles are the best acted. But very often they are not the best acted. Frequently some artist in a small part will do the finest work in the company. In such cases he or she should get the full credit due the achievement.

There are a great many small parts—"bit parts," the actors call them—which are also called "fat parts," or "actor-proof." They are bound to be amusing whoever plays them. The dramas of Clyde Fitch used to be full of such parts—slangy manicures, Cook tourists, and the like. There is always danger in overpraising the actors in such rôles. But when the small part stands out by virtue of the artistry of the actor, that actor should be encouraged and praised, even at the expense of a jealous star.

IN "THE CASE OF BECKY"

A very good case in point is offered by the Belasco production of "The Case of Becky," now current at the Belasco Theatre in New York, with Miss Frances Starr in the title part. Being the star, this actress, in almost all the press reviews, received the lion's share of the attention. Yet the real star performance, from an artistic point of view, is that of Charles Dalton as the burly, full-blooded, flamboyant, brutal, traveling hypnotist. The one rôle is acted correctly and efficiently, and nothing more. The other is acted by Mr. Dalton with genuine imagination, so that he builds up a vivid character and makes it live before us. The one performance is small and unimportant; the other is virile, ample, highly colored, unusual, and marks the actor as an important artist. The honest critic ought to say so. Virtue is its own reward, but that is no reason why it should be its only reward.

In the same play Miss Mary Lawton, in the small and rather thankless part of the trained nurse, very successfully denotes a woman totally devoid of a sense of humor—a feat which some may not believe difficult! But her work is clear cut and sure and painstaking, and should receive its meed of praise.

Few who saw "Bought and Paid For" will forget the acting of Frank Craven as the brother-in-law. There was a fat part, to be sure, and it was as fatly acted as it should have been. Craven is a young man with a long experience. He knew how to grasp his comic opportunities. He made every pause count, every inflection, every grimace. Those who saw him with Olga Nethersole in a bad play called "The Writing on the Wall" will recall that in that drama, too, he was conspicuous. Indeed, in that drama he alone was conspicuous. He has a genuine talent for comedy, and a fine technique. He should get the credit for them, as, indeed, we are glad to say he at last has.

EXCELLENTLY PLAYED "BIT PARTS"

When Mr. Ames opened his Little Theatre last spring with Galsworthy's "The Pigeon," he presented a fine company, perfectly drilled. All the parts were well acted. But one especially was distinguished for a subtle quality of imagination—that of the philosophic tramp by Frank Reicher. Mr. Reicher had previously played the star part in Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow." Here he was merely one of an ensemble. But his work stood out, because he is a rare artist, who not only speaks beautifully, characterizes surely, and knows the routine of his trade, but because he has that finer feeling for the spiritual overtones of drama, and can, even in a speech of minor importance in the play, make one feel the touch of thoughts and forces outside the theatre, kindling the hearer's reflection and imagination. There is a good bit of the creative poet in this young player, and personally we look to a brilliant future for him.

There are several players now before the public who almost always appear in smaller rôles, or character parts, in support, usually of some star, but whose skill makes them always conspicuous. Such a one is Ernest Lawford. He acted the poor, shy bookworm with Billie Burke in "Love Watches," and made Miss Burke's stumbling technique and shallow methods the more conspicuous. He acted both the Father and the Pirate Hook in "Peter Pan," and was a fit foil for Miss Adams. Most recently he acted Sammy Burns, the London tramp, in "Passers-by," and touched that drama with wistful fancy as none other in the cast could do.

Another actor who has played more small parts well than, perhaps, any other player on our stage is Ferdinand Gottschalk. From the days when he acted Trotter in "The Climbers" and asserted that he was no Dodo bird, to his cameo-like clowns in Shakespeare and his clean-cut modern rôles at the New Theatre, everything he has done has been marked by personal charm, sound intelligence, and unerring technical skill. Nature has not enabled Mr. Gottschalk to be a romantic leading man, but he can teach most leading men a whole lot about acting.

A player whom the public loves to see in the small parts assigned to him is William Sampson, the Kentucky gambler in "The Witching Hour" and the theatrical press agent in "The Easiest Way." Both were fat parts, to be sure, but anyone who has seen them played by the smaller stock companies knows that Mr. Sampson brought to them a certain sweetness and mellowness of fun, a technical sureness, and to the later rôle a touch of pathos, which were all his own. You couldn't dismiss him with the critic's horrid cant word, "competent." He played those parts up to the limit.

BELASCO'S WELL PICKED ACTORS

Mr. Belasco, of course, has such a knack for picking players who fit their rôles, or for training them to fit, that it is not easy to say in his casts where the actors deserve special credit. Yet the bluff sincerity of the homely types John Cope has portrayed in Belasco's recent productions seems to belong to the actor and not to his coach. Miss Mary Nash, too, who is playing the telephone switch girl in "The Woman" is so amazingly correct to the type in life that it must be her own keen powers of observation which have taught her the way. This seems all the more likely as her sister, Florence, is this season

By a real method of his own, Alan Pollock raised his parts in "Seven Days" and "What the Doctor Ordered" into prominence

Taylor Holmes's part in "The Million" stands out because he has an acting style several grades higher than that of the ordinary technique of farce

Fatly as it deserves does Frank Craven play his fat part in "Bought and Paid For" acting in "Within the Law," under a totally different and less skillful manager, and yet she, too, displays a comedy sense and a remarkable gift for catching the ways of a type in life—in her case a slangy girl of the underworld.

In the Belasco production of "The Governor's Lady," too, the assured poise and the beautiful diction of Mrs. Maxwell Conover are things not taught, but possessed. We have seen Mrs. Conover in other rôles. She has not a manner, but manners—and they are rare enough on our stage to be noteworthy.

GIVING THE SATELLITES THEIR DUE

Often, in thinking back over the plays we have seen, what stands out in our memory is the impersonation of some seemingly minor rôle. We do not forget a star performance by Mrs. Fiske, or Otis Skinner, or Ethel Barrymore—the new Ethel Barrymore—or Richard Mansfield, or Duse, or any of the true stars; but the little stars which rise in a night do not impress their performances on our memory because they do not act well enough. Some good actor or actress in their company did the memorable work—without being on the bill boards.

Indeed, even when the star is a true artist, the minor player may chance to be the better remembered. Personally, we recall the performance of Miss Helen Ormsbee in "A Man's World" more vividly than that of the star, Miss Mary Mannering. Hers was, to be sure, a quaint, pathetic little rôle, so odd that one would remember it. But Miss Ormsbee acted it with such sincerity that it probably gained even over the author's intention.

In "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" we, of course, remember Forbes Robertson distinctly, but of all the rest we plainly recall only the Painted Lady, as acted by Miss Haidee Wright—another one of those pathetically feminine rôles which appeal by their faded frailty. However, Miss Wright has gone on in England to fresh achievements, showing that it was her acting no less than the part which counted. This very season, in Lewis Waller's production of "Henry V," one recalls scarcely less than Mr. Waller's King, the Fluellen of Alec. F. Thompson, because Mr. Thompson made a definite, well rounded, vivid character study in a cast where most of the actors were incompetent.

ANY art which has developed a notable efficiency of method runs the danger of ignoring the primary importance of material. The rapid development in recent years of our new art of stage-direction has made it possible for us to exhibit on the stage a series of pictures remarkable either for their faithful adherence to actuality or else for their evocation of the aloof, alluring atmosphere of other times and lands; but this new technical equipment has confronted us not only with an opportunity but also with a peril. Many of our contemporary dramas suffer from being "over-produced" (if we may be pardoned a somewhat slangy adjective); for emphasis is cast upon the artistry of presentation instead of on the dramatic significance inherent in the plays themselves.

The greatest sins of stage-direction are commonly committed by the greatest masters of the art, for only they are capable of carrying their technical efficiency to an illogical extreme. Thus, in his production of his own play entitled "The Madras House," which has not yet been imported to America, Mr. Granville Barker so closely imitated the daily drift of actuality that he prevented himself from revealing any central and informing theme. But facts are significant only when they make us aware of some recurrent and important truth; and an exhibition of the facts of life, however faithful, is valuable only when it teaches us some principle that applies with equal pertinence to other chapters of experience than the one which has been set before us.

Another danger that besets this new art is that it may cast a glamor of apparent actuality over situations that are in themselves theatrical and false. It is before this peril that our own American wizard of the theatre most frequently falls down. Often, as in the epilogue of "The Governor's Lady," Mr. David Belasco exhibits a scene that imitates the very look of life, but which, when analyzed in accordance with the logic of the characters, is seen to be inherently untrue.

A still greater danger to the theatre of to-day is the fact that it is equipped to present vividly to the eye a series of pictures which, though beautiful in themselves, may be devoid of any dramatic significance. Too often, at the present time, our theatres aspire to emulate our hippodromes, and, in default of drama, fall back upon the appeal of panoramic pictures. An emphatic instance of this peril has been offered by Mr. George C. Tyler's two productions at the Century Theatre.

"THE DAUGHTER OF HEAVEN"

MR. TYLER is one of the very few American managers who may always be depended on to make an earnest effort to supply the public with good art. When he assumed direction of the Century Theatre he found himself confronted by a puzzling problem. That mausoleum of many buried hopes had proved itself unsuitable for the effective presentation of the intimate and subtle drama of to-day. Mr. Tyler therefore decided to use it for spectacular productions. This was a logical and sane decision, but the difficulty was to find a panoramic play that should satisfy the taste of the contemporary public. Our best dramatists have long ceased to devote their attention to this type of composition, and the trappings and the suits of the spectacular drama are at present as anachronistic as the enormous auditorium which Mr. Tyler has upon his hands. His first production, "The Garden of Allah," was an ineffective re-arrangement of an undramatic novel which was unfolded with a long and languorous accompaniment of many rich and lovely sets of scenery. His present offering, "The Daughter of Heaven," is even more colorful and gorgeous as a spectacle, and even more dull and tedious as a play.

"The Daughter of Heaven" was written by Pierre Loti and Judith Gautier. Despite the vulgar flippancy of our American newspaper reporters, who have apparently considered it clever to be discourteous to a distinguished visitor, we should never allow ourselves to forget that Pierre Loti is the master of one of the most glorious literary styles that have ever yet been developed in the history of prose. Any schoolboy who has spelled out "Pêcheur d'Islande" as a task in French must have had his ears haunted ever after (unless, indeed, he grew up to be a ship-news reporter) by that tear-compelling eloquence of style. But the genius of Loti is not at all dramatic. He has had very little experience in the theatre, and his novels are notable more for his exquisite ability to evoke an exotic atmosphere than for any tensivity of action or clash of characters. It is not surprising, therefore, that "The Daughter of Heaven" should be valueless as drama. The story is not told in terms of action, and only at isolated moments does it exhibit any struggle of contending wills. Even the literary style of Loti, which requires for its full effect an undisrupted continuity of prose, is inadequate to cope with the cut and thrust of dialogue; and whatever merit of writing may have been achieved in the original text is, of course, discounted by translation to another language.

Both as a dramatic and as a purely literary composition "The Daughter of Heaven" is a failure. Whatever praise may be accorded to the production must be confined to the scenery and costumes.

To summarize the piece, it will therefore be sufficient to enumerate the sets of scenery. No less than eight stage

When the Modern Art of Stage-Direction Will Carry a Play and When It Will Not—The Best of Shaw's "Plays Pleasant"—A Drama Without the Rustle of a Petticoat pictures are strung along the slender thread of narrative, and all of these are interesting to the eye. If clothes could make a man, or investiture a drama, the critic would not be required to class this work as an artistic failure.

By CLAYTON HAMILTON

The man-hunting heroine and her prey in "Man and Superman"

The curtain is lifted first upon a flowing river down which a boat is drifting. We find ourselves in China, beneath a mysterious and twilight sky, and two people in the boat are singing a Chinese love-song to each other. Next we visit the palace in Peking, where the young Manchu Emperor, grown restive under the enforced confinement of his life, resolves to run away and seek adventure in disguise. He is allured to Nankin by the reports of the great beauty of the Daughter of Heaven, the Empress of the ancient Chinese race that owes allegiance to his own. He disguises himself as one of her viceroys and seeks to meet her. He sees her first in the charming gardens of her palace, and they love each other at first sight. Next he wins her approbation by his eloquence in delivering a formal address in the throne-room of her palace. But, upon a moon-silvery evening, on the terrace of her pavilion, she is informed that her beloved viceroy is a Manchu spy, and, thrusting his image from her heart, she resolves to make war upon the Manchus.

Upon the Nankin battlements we see her defeated and captured, and yet shielded by the clemency of her imperial opponent. Before the gates of Peking her soldiers are decapitated, but she is led unharmed into the throne-room of the Manchu Emperor. He implores her to end the enmity between their races by marrying him and sharing the throne of a united China, but in fidelity to her own people, she takes a draught of poison. While she is dying she confesses to the Manchu Emperor that she loves him, and after she is dead he seats her on his throne and requires his courtiers to pay solemn obeisance to her. There are many alarms and excursions in this discursive story, but there is no steady march of drama.

"THE CASE OF BECKY"

A MORE dramatic employment of the art of stage-direction is exhibited by Mr. David Belasco in his production of "The Case of Becky," a play by Mr. Edward Locke. It is likely that this melodrama would seem very artificial if we should merely read the text in manuscript, but Mr. Belasco, by his deft attention to actualistic details, has succeeded in making it appear plausible upon the stage.

Recent scientific investigations of phenomena which hitherto have been regarded as occult have offered to our authors a new medium through which to minister to the eternal mood of wonder. In his tales of pseudo-science Edgar Allan Poe, for instance, evoked a thrill by retelling the medieval type of magic legend with a new technical terminology. At the present time, when the miraculous cure of incurable diseases may be made to sound possible by referring it to Christian Science, and when ghosts may be made plausible by referring to Professor Hyslop's scientific investigations of spiritualism, it is possible to make the theatre-going public accept nearly any tale of magic—if the services of Mr. Belasco as a stage-director can be enlisted.

In "The Case of Becky," Mr. Locke has tried to make the legend of Jekyll and Hyde seem scientific by labelling his instance with the new name of "dual personality." The heroine, Dorothy Stone, is normally a lovely girl; but frequently she lapses into a secondary self, that of the hoydenish and vicious Becky. When she recovers from her trances, Dorothy preserves no recollection of Becky's pranks; but Becky has a complete memory of Dorothy's experience and does everything she can to make life miserable for her better self. The heroine is placed under the care of a famous specialist, Dr. Emerson, who ultimately succeeds in hypnotizing her at a moment when the personality of Becky is utterly dominant, and proceeds by the power of suggestion to cast out this devil forever from the body of his patient. This main strand of the story affords Miss Frances Starr an opportunity to perform what amounts practically to a dual rôle, and her depiction of the transitions from one personality to the other is finely accomplished.

In the "dual personality" story of "The Case of Becky" Frances Starr has an excellent opportunity to play the always sensational double rôle

The cause of the heroine's obsession is due to the fact that in her early childhood she has been exploited repeatedly as a subject in the theatrical exhibitions of a traveling hypnotist who calls himself Professor Balzamo. In the somewhat violently melodramatic act which terminates the play, Dr. Emerson contrives to cast Balzamo into an hypnotic trance and, again employing the power of suggestion, breaks his hold over the heroine forever. The hypnotist-villain is flamboyantly and thrillingly depicted by Mr. Charles Dalton, and the hypnotist-hero is beautifully rendered by Mr. Albert Bruning.

But the hypnotist-stage-director is even more successful with his audience. The last act is set in a white and prophylactic laboratory adorned with many wonderful electrical machines which are shown off to the delectation of the spectators; but the setting for the first two acts is more artistic. The furniture of Dr. Emerson's office dates from many different years, and a general air of calm accretion confers upon the room a sense of homeliness and peace. Mr. Belasco certainly does know how to paint a picture within a modern picture-frame proscenium.

"MAN AND SUPERMAN"

IN sharp contrast to the preceding plays, Mr. Bernard Shaw's extraordinary comedy entitled "Man and Superman" is not in the least dependent upon stage-direction. It is equally interesting in or out of the theatre, and belongs at once to the drama and to literature.

In this play Mr. Shaw has accomplished an unprecedented feat. He has had the audacity to describe his hero as a writer of genius, and subsequently he has proved the point in everything the hero says and does. This feat, of course, could be accomplished only by making the hero the mouthpiece of the author. The comedy is merely a continuous conversation between John Tanner and nearly a dozen other people. The hero begins a tirade of talking at his first entrance, and is still eagerly engaged in talking while the final curtain falls; but so brilliant is his conversation that he never for a moment loses the attention of the audience.

At this date it is unnecessary to retell the story of this famous play, or to discuss the views that Mr. Shaw has promulgated through the medium of his revolutionary hero. The leading motive of the comedy is the thesis that woman, and not man, is the aggressor in what our eighteenth-century forefathers used to call the love-chase. As usual, Mr. Shaw has upset a romantic tradition by emphatically stating the other half of the truth. It is true that women hunt men, but it is also true that men hunt women; hence Mr. Shaw's thesis is just as partial as the chivalrous legend that he seeks to overturn. A similar circumscription may be noted in John Tanner's views of all the other questions that he brings up for discussion; for if it be granted that the conventional mind can see only one half of the truth, it must also be granted that a mind that is utterly unconventional can see only the other half.

We are greatly indebted to Mr. Robert Loraine for reviving "Man and Superman," and permitting us to see it in the same season with "Fanny's First Play." The maiden effort of Mr. Shaw's modern-minded heroine is perhaps the more amusing composition, because it is so uproariously irresponsible; but there can be no question that "Man and Superman" is the more important work. Indeed, this satirical review of Schopenhauer and Nietzsche is the most profoundly philosophical of all this author's writings, and, if not his greatest play (one can never quite forget the claims of "Candida"), is assuredly his greatest literary work.

"THE BRUTE"

MR. FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER had something thoroughly sincere to say in his drama called "The Brute," but he failed to say it efficiently because of his lack of practice in the technique of the theatre. The last act is emphatically effective, but, before this final act is reached, the audience has been already wearied by waiting through two acts of desultory narrative.

A woman who for some years has been leading a dull life in a Harlem flat grows weary of her husband's poverty. An intimate friend of her husband's, who happens to be rich, takes her riding in his motor-car. She imagines herself to be in love with him, and ultimately arranges to elope with him and take her only child along. From this sin she is saved by the sudden death of her lover. In his will he makes her heir to nearly half a million dollars, and her unsuspecting husband regards this as an evidence of his dead friend's disinterested generosity. These data are expounded to the audience by a method that is basically false, and the author does not succeed in making credible the credulity of the husband.

In the second act, the story halts and marks time through many tedious conversations about nothing, until at the curtain-fall the husband discovers the real reason for the bequest to his wife. He takes his child away from her, and returns to the Harlem flat from the luxurious villa which had been hired for the summer with the tainted funds.

In the final act, the wife attempts a reconciliation, but her husband demands that she shall first purge herself of the impurity of her intent by giving away the entire legacy to charity and accepting once again a life of poverty with him. Because of this demand, she stigmatizes him as a brute. Stung by this attack, he becomes, for the first time in the history of their relation, really brutal toward her. He tears off her rich finery and flings her about the room, thereby making her realize that she is married to a man who means to dominate her. She agrees to give up the money, and to attempt with due humility to fulfill her appointed task as wife and mother.

"THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL"

MR. WINTHROP AMES inaugurated the second season at his Little Theatre with a tasteful presentation of five of the seven dialogues in Arthur Schnitzler's famous sequence entitled "Anatol." Schnitzler, who has already been introduced to American theatre-goers by Miss Katherine Grey's performance of "The Reckoning," and Mrs. Fiske's production of "The Green Cockatoo," is the cleverest dramatist writing in Austria to-day. His dominant quality is a sinister and somewhat cynical worldly-wisdom—incisive, experienced, disconcerting. Before he took to writing for the theatre, he had already established himself as a physician; and it is doubtless from the practice of his primary profession that he acquired his almost uncanny intimacy with the emotional phenomena of sex.

"Anatol," which has been paraphrased in English by Mr. Granville Barker, is not intended as a play. It is merely a cluster of conversations, each of which is independent of the others. The hero is a young Viennese aristocrat to whom life is synonymous with love. He can feel himself alive only when he is falling in love or falling out of it. Lightly he flits from flower to flower. The course of his "affairs" he is accustomed to confide (one must protest, a little cadishly) to his friend Max. The seven dialogues in Schnitzler's original sequence represent conversations between Anatol and seven different objects of his versatile affection. Five of these dialogues, as has been said, are now presented at the Little Theatre. Mr. John Barrymore, as Anatol, is offered an opportunity to make love to five different leading ladies in the course of a single evening's entertainment.

The five actresses selected by Mr. Ames are, we regret to note, not equally equipped to embody the manifold intentions of the author. The finest performance of the evening is offered by Miss Katherine Emmet in the daintily emotional sketch entitled "A Christmas Present." In this dialogue, also, Mr. Barrymore does his best work, though his performance as a whole is deftly composed and delicately varied.

It has become almost superfluous to praise the stage-direction of Mr. George Foster Platt, but it ought perhaps to be recorded that the stage settings of these dialogues are charmingly in harmony with the aristocracy of tone which Mr. Ames has so delightfully established at his tiny, tasteful theatre.

"THE NEW SIN"

WITH "The New Sin," which was produced (be it recorded to his credit) by Mr. George C. Tyler, we are confronted by a new author, Mr. Basil Macdonald Hastings. Mr. Hastings is evidently a follower of Mr. Granville Barker, and, like his master, he is endowed with brains. This is his first play, and it inspires us, for more reasons than one, to ask him to sit down at once and write another.

"The New Sin" is not a great play, because it is founded on a premise that is almost incredible, and because the characters often speak the author's words instead of thinking for themselves; but the plan of the piece gives evidence of a new and startling talent for the theatre, and the dialogue expresses more sheer thought to the square inch than we are accustomed to discover in any plays but Mr. Barker's. The author seems a little deficient in humor, and he is too earnest to make a try for wit, but he can truthfully draw character in dialogue, and can make his startled auditors enjoy the rather rare experience of thinking in the theatre.

Among the famous epigrams that are recorded, is the retort of the cynic Frenchman to the commonplace remark, "After all, I have to live!"—"Je n'en vois pas la nécessité" ("I really don't see why"). In the present play, Mr. Hastings has weighed living and dying in the balance, and has suggested that, in certain extraordinary cases, the duty to live may not be so evident as is commonly assumed in our moralizing copy-books. The hypothetical new sin that is designated by his title, is the sin that a man may commit by merely continuing an unserviceable life when his death might be of benefit to a dozen fellow-creatures.

The father of Hilary Cutts has made an extraordinary will. Hilary had incurred the displeasure of his parent; and before dying, the old gentleman had resolved to tie up his considerable fortune in such a way that Hilary, his eldest son, should never share in it. He left all his money to the ten or a dozen of Hilary's younger brothers and sisters; but fearing lest they should give a share of the legacy to him, he made a provision that the money should not be paid to them till Hilary should die, or, in the event of his continuance in life, until the lapse of twenty-one years. It happens that Hilary, who is a talented painter, is the only member of the family who is self-supporting; and feeling that he has robbed his relatives of their inheritance, he generously gives them all the money he earns. This quixotic generosity thwarts his own advancement in the only career in which he may be of service to humanity; so, after several years of bondage, he calmly and logically makes up his mind that his duty to his helpless brothers and sisters demands that he should kill himself.

A weak-minded younger brother, Max, who has been discharged from his position in a draper's establishment, shoots his ex-employer dead. Hilary, who happens to be present at the moment of this impulsive crime, welcomes the opportunity to assume the guilt of murder. He is convicted by his own confession and by the corroborative testimony of Max, and is sentenced to be hanged. At last he is about to expiate his "new sin" of continuing to live. But the authorities commute his sentence to imprisonment for life. His family is, therefore, no better situated than before.

It was at this point that the play originally ended, with a note of mordant irony; but as a sop to American theatre-goers (as if we were less intelligent than the public of London!), the author has been induced to add another act. In this epilogue Max is broken down to a confession, as a result of which Hilary is pardoned and released. Hilary, who has sold an Academy picture for a large sum, buys immunity from his relatives and is set free to pursue unhampered his individual career.

Since the basis of this story is incredible, no mere summary of the plot can convey an adequate intimation of the intellectual power which Mr. Hastings has brought to bear upon his discussion of the strange new problem (it was not new, of course, in ancient Rome) of the duty and the right to live or die. This play is made notable not so much by its subject-matter as by the author's treatment of it. The profundity of this treatment can scarcely be suggested in a summary review.

It should, perhaps, be noted as a novelty that no woman appears upon the stage during the entire course of the drama; and it is extremely instructive to observe that the audience never for a moment misses the element of the eternal feminine. After all, many dramas are enacted in the roaring life of every day, in which women play no parts, and there is no logical reason why the theatre should exclude situations that are merely masculine.

"HENRY V"

EVERYBODY must regret the commercial failure of Mr. Lewis Waller's revival of Shakespeare's "Henry V" at Daly's Theatre. The piece is by no means one of the most dramatic of Shakespeare's historical chronicles; the action is too scattered and too desultory; but it affords an opportunity for panoramic production, and it contains many passages of unforgettable eloquence. The character of the king himself, a more mature and virile hero than the rollicking Prince Hal of the two parts of "Henry IV," offers the actor a rare occasion for the display of an appealing personality; and certain incidents that are scattered through the drift of narrative arrest attention by their tenseness.

Undoubtedly, one reason for the failure of Mr. Waller's production was the fact that the majority of those who saw it, could not help comparing it with the production made by the late Richard Mansfield at the Garden Theatre a dozen years ago. Speaking broadly, it may be said that Mr. Waller is a "straight" actor and Mr. Mansfield was a "character" actor. Their methods are so diametrically different that, to the same audience, any part that has become associated with one of these performers will never seem quite satisfactory when acted by the other. Mr. Mansfield was at his best in parts that permitted an imperious self-assertion, and his kingly figure of the hero of Agincourt still lives emphatically in the memory. Compared with this creation, Mr. Waller's more natural and in some ways more ingratiating performance looks a little pallid.

Miss Hyland of "The Little Café" company wears a white satin frock, the panniers of which turn back like a fish-wife's skirt to fall in folds to the hem. A lace overdress that opens in the front is edged with rows of paste-embroidered lace and clusters of white chiffon roses and silver leaves. Upon a bodice of similar treatment is posed a broad "obi" sash

The GLORY of the WRAP

SOLOMON in all his glory was never arrayed more gorgeously than the present-day fashionable woman in evening attire. The lavishness of evening wraps especially has never been surpassed; indeed, they exceed in richness the most costly evening gowns. The latter are rather simple in line and execution and depend almost solely upon the beauty of the tissues used for them—lamé, stamped chiffon velvet, or chiffon brocaded in gold, silver, or copper.

Often the woman who is the possessor of a faultless neck and shoulders enhances her beauty by choosing a gown of black or ivory satin that consists principally of a skirt draped or slit in back. Extend this skirt up to form a belt, higher at one side, or shaped into a very low corselet entirely veiled with tulle (this extension is about all the corseage there is), and you have the prevailing type of evening gown.

The tulle, malines, or chiffon is more often flesh color than white, and is laid in overlapping layers across the bust. At a little distance it is scarcely distinguishable from neck and shoulders. Rivers of rhinestones sometimes form shoulder straps to take the place of the tulle over the shoulders. If the skirt is black, a very effective result is often obtained with rhinestones and beads graded from white to gray and from gray to black, and applied on the lower portion of the bodice.

THE BLACK-AND-WHITE WRAP

At a recent première, three black-and-white wraps were conspicuous for their beauty. Two were worn by well-known actresses, and the third by Madame Paquin herself. Of the first two, one was of black and silver broché velvet stamped in a novel, conventionalized design of leaves. It had a deep shawl collar and cuffs of white ermine. The other was a daring combination of black velvet and ermine; the fur formed the upper half of the wrap and was scalloped at the edge where it met the velvet.

The coat worn by Madame Paquin was of heavy white satin which pointed deeply under either arm into the lower half of black velvet which formed a narrowing panel half way up the back. The insets were handsomely outlined with silver beads and rhinestones. The sleeves of white satin were bound with wide bands of black and white fox, and a long white fox encircled her neck and dropped low on both sides. As she sat in her box all evening without coming out between the acts, those who were interested caught only a rapid glimpse of her gown as she was leaving. But that glimpse served to show a happy combination of a black velvet skirt over which was draped an overskirt of white tulle edged with rhinestones and trimmed two inches above with a narrow band of fox. Over this again fell a shorter tunic of white satin handsomely embroidered with a deep border of silver beads and rhinestones. White satin bretelles banded either side of the bodice which was entirely of tulle. A large, handsome, diamond brooch caught at the breast the folds of the tulle which veiled her sloping shoulders, and the pointed belt of black satin. Her unique coiffure consisted of two bands of closely set rhinestones, along the edge of which were strung short white aigrettes which lay flat and encircled her head rather low on the forehead. On the left side the bands doubled in number and gave an unusually chic and charming effect.

THE BEAUTY OF ALL-FUR

A long evening wrap of ermine which speaks the last word in regal beauty is shown at the bottom of page 56. It is cut to form a point at the neck in back and front. These points taper to form other points below the hips, where they are spanned with heavy white silk cording caught at either end with white braided buttons. The crushed collar and huge muff which the figure carries thrust behind it are of ermine; the latter slightly recalls the wrap in the arrangement of the points.

It is said that no nation can compete in unconscious elegance with the Italian woman of race and wealth. She wears the handsomest clothes with charm and apparent indifference to them. In a box adjacent to that of Madame Paquin there sat that same evening an Italian countess whose clothes were forgotten in the fascination inspired by the delightful manner in which she entertained her guests. But when she left her box at the close of the performance, attention was drawn to her sumptuous wrap of wonderfully matched chinchilla skins. This is illustrated in the first drawing on this page.

One of the most original of the brocaded wraps seen this season is a Chéruit creation of a deep yellow and gold tapestry lamé, with collar and sleeve bands of sable and a very long cape hood in back of black velvet; this is sketched at the top of page 56.

Bernard also shows quite an unusual combination of salmon satin brocaded in silver and trimmed with moleskin; the latter forms a deep collar in back; this narrows down the front and widens again into a deep band around the bottom. Six frogs and corded loops of the lamé ornament both sides of the wrap.

WRAPPED À LA POIRET

Poiret, who cannot boast of having launched anything radically different from his original conceptions during the past two years, was the first last spring to alter the narrow silhouette of evening wraps. The handsome printed tissues and rich velvets woven exclusively for him fell in full, extravagant folds that dragged all around. This autumn he has proved himself past master in the beauty and variety of his evening wraps, which qualities two examples will verify. One of soft cerise velvet, shown at the bottom of this page, is draped to form three folds over the right shoulder; this drapery continues in a long scarf-end across the back and down over the right shoulder, where it hangs loose, weighted with a band of sable. Sable edges the bottom of the wrap, and the fullness of the sleeve is held in a wide cuff of the fur. Another model of taupe plush shows in front crossed bands of taupe metallic lace applied over canary yellow satin. Badger fur forms the collar and cuffs. This is illustrated on the extreme left of page 56.

A WEEKS MODEL FOR A DÉBUTANTE

Madame Weeks may well be proud of the charmingly youthful creation she designed for a pretty blonde, who will shortly make her début in America. The material was a reversible plush, creamy white outside and deep turquoise blue inside. The raw edges were embroidered with an uneven buttonhole-stitch of cream floss silk and wool. The drop panel in back was slightly caught up on either side and there trimmed with plush buttons. A deep hood attached to each side of the front dropped low in back to show the blue side of the material to advantage. The full sleeve, caught in a band, had a soft, flexible, turned-back cuff of the blue, and the same effect was carried out in the narrow revers in front. Madame Weeks repeated this model, which is sketched on the right of this page, in cream and crimson for a piquant brunette, and the effect was wonderful.

PARIS VOGUE POINTS

SINGLE clusters of brilliant-colored chenille flowers, embroidered flat and low to the left on deep, transparent yokes of white or light-colored chiffon, are used with good effect by Drécoll as substitutes for the artificial nosegay without which no French gown seems complete.

Jeanne Lanvin is showing short, loose, baggy waists, long shoulders, and ample sleeves gathered into a band and finished at the hand with a ruffle of net or chiffon.

In the high neck gowns, which are rare this season, the general line of trimming is in broad, rounded yokes, with lines of lace or braiding running out nearly to the shoulder in a most becoming way.

Plaited skirts of net, cloth, and crêpe often hang loose and straight from belt to hem, where, after the manner of the hobble, the fullness is held in tight about the feet by a narrow stitched band.

Many of the Drécoll dress sleeves are long, tight, and without sign of drapery or fullness. They start from a dropped shoulder seam, and finish at the hand with a flaring cuff which extends over the knuckles at the back, but is slashed at one side. From the wrist half way to the elbow the sleeve buttons snugly with six or more medium-sized silk or cloth-covered buttons.

Drécoll's coats are chiefly cutaway. They slope from about four inches above the knee in front to a little below the knee in the back, and there is an indication of a flare or ripple just behind the hips. The sleeves are long and bell-shaped at the hand.

A few models in unspotted ermine and sable show the short, loose jacket cut straight under the arm, reaching just to the waist-line in front, and rounding to slightly below the belt in the back.

A rather odd but becoming model for an automobile veil is composed of a twelve-inch square of shadow lace which is inserted into the center of a long chiffon scarf. When adjusted over the hat, the lace comes directly over the face, while the neck and hat are securely protected from the dust by the thick folds of chiffon. These scarfs are about two and a half yards long. They may be had in écaru, blue, and other pale shades, with lace to match.

COMES a NEW MODE in JEWELRY

A LONG the rue de la Paix glitters the usual seasonable array of rare and costly jewels. All that is newest and best is either created here or inevitably drifts here, to receive the mark of approval before going to the marts of the world. At first sight this year's display would seem to indicate that the fashions have changed but little. Gradually, however, when the eye begins to decipher details, one sees that, though the forms and general outlines are familiar, the designs are more delicate and exquisite; indeed, the beauty of craftsmanship and design is now a consideration of equal importance with the size and value of the stones. As a natural result of the increased attention to workmanship comes a corresponding decrease in the use of large stones. The most beautiful and expensive of the new ornaments are composed of jewels of moderate size set with hundreds of small brilliants.

THE ART OF VEVE

There are in Paris many classes of jewelers. First there are the followers of the Art Nouveau, for whose richly colored and beautifully worked specimens there is a decided penchant; then there is the class which produces only the latest fads and fancies; and there are the great houses which show rare stones and beautiful settings that have caused them to be considered as the censors of the mode.

In the latter class is Vever, a diamond tiara from whom is shown at the top of this page. Across the broad curved top, which rises gradually toward the middle, run clusters of mimosa flowers composed of solitaires of great clearness and brilliancy. Each cluster is separated by slender pointed leaves of platinum thickly studded with small stones. These radiate in a graceful line from the base and fill in the open portion of the tiara.

The profuse use of the diamonds and other white stones is a distinct feature of the season, though occasionally a vivid touch of color is introduced with striking effect as in the peacock feather plaque for the neck, illustrated below the diamond tiara. Here the fine feather ends are of hair-lines of platinum studded with small stones, while the eye of the feather is of blue enamel shading so marvelously from dark to light tones as to resemble an opal. A striking combination of white and colored stones is again seen in the pendant or corsage ornament shown in the left-hand corner of this page. This is made of platinum and is set with diamonds and queer, clouded, oval-shaped emeralds cut to follow the scroll motif of the design. One large pearl and two scroll-shaped emeralds set deep in a background of brilliants form the lower middle figure, on either side of which are leaf-shaped motifs, broad at the top and narrowing into smaller leaves at the bottom. From the middle hangs a detachable pendant composed of a heavily bordered edge of emeralds and diamonds, and a platinum-set solitaire; the latter is held securely in place by delicate threads of platinum which, like the veins of a leaf, span the intervening space. This clever arrangement of almost invisible threads relieves the massive appearance of the central stones, and imparts the cobwebby effect required in the jewelry of the moment. The lacy patterns so much in demand last year are in even greater favor now, and many of the pins, tiaras, and plaques for the neck are made in charming filigree designs. The square mesh weave of the filigree is made of tiny platinum threads, while the pattern, a flower or the head of an animal, is carried out in diamonds of greater or less size, according to the elegance of the piece.

WHITE GEMS TO REFLECT COLOR

Pendants are usually in one or two forms, round or elongated. An example of the latter shape is shown at the top of page 102. Here long, graceful, geometrical figures formed of good sized diamonds curve from two diamond flowers at the top down to a large stone of limpid clearness which hangs quivering like a raindrop.

Crystal is much in favor. A unique pendant is made of heavy, engraved crystal with curved and beveled edges. It is round, and the upper surface is ornamented by a flower design of sunken diamonds surrounded by alternate circles of engraving and smaller diamonds. The pendant measures two inches in diameter and hangs by a loop of diamonds from a platinum chain. It is seen to advantage when worn with a pronounced color which is reflected in the transparent surface of the crystal in a thousand gleaming lights.

ANTIQUÉ AND MODERN BRACELETS

SEEN IN THE SHOPS

A GOOD-LOOKING, practical frock of blue serge such as every schoolgirl needs at this time of the year is shown on the right figure. The trimmings consist of a well-cut, modified Robespierre collar of black satin, hand-embroidered in the corners with a conventional design of pretty, contrasting shades, cuffs of black satin with a number of small, black braid buttons that extend almost to the bend of the arm, and a satin sash slipped through an oval, braided buckle in front. Large, black braid buttons outline the front fastening from neck to hem. The popular coat effect is gained by a shaped band of serge which is stitched in at the side seams; over it, directly in the back, hangs a little tab of serge trimmed on each side with small buttons. The price is only $13.50. It may be ordered in sizes for the grown-ups without extra charge.

NEW DETAILS IN A TOP COAT

The middle drawing shows an automobile coat which may also be brought into service as a top coat. The material is a gray and black cloth with a silver sheen. The model is perfectly straight, both in back and front, and is broken on the right-hand side (not visible in the picture) by a slot pocket ornamented with a similarly shaped tab. Large cat's-eye buttons are used for the front fastenings and on the sleeves. On the latter a strap is run through a buckle of the cloth; this may be buttoned as snugly or loosely as the wearer desires. A stitched tuck which extends around and over the armhole gives the effect of the very large armhole. The two buttons at the shoulder may be left unfastened and the coat turned back to form two large revers; the collar can be turned up even higher around the neck. The coat is 50 inches long, and costs $19.50.

A WINTER-SUMMER ULSTER

The figure on the extreme left shows what is apparently a smart coat not very different from many other well-cut motor ulsters; a very vital difference, however, is that it has a lining which buttons in and may be removed in an instant. The outside of the coat is of an excellent quality of brown English mixture cloth. The side seams are cleverly cut, and overlap half way down under the three large tortoise-shell buttons which fasten the front. The back hangs in good straight lines from shoulder to hem. The round collar, deep, turn-back cuffs, and slanting pockets are finished with a simple row of stitching.

The convertible fur lining is of German Hemstead fur, soft and dark brown.

This fur is less perishable than many other long-haired furs and is warranted not to shed. The beauty of the coat is that there is not the slightest clumsiness noticeable when the lining is worn, and, of course, the convenience of having a garment that is adaptable to changing temperature, is at once obvious. The coat may be bought without the fur lining for $25, and with it for $50.

WRAPS LONG AND SHORT

The sketch at the top of page 62 illustrates a wrap that the middle-aged woman would find charming. This coat consists principally of the broad out-lining band and yoke of black velvet with a small body portion of a soft, black moire silk. A cording of black faille edges the velvet band and emphasizes the smart cut of the yoke. Collar and cuffs are of opossum. A slight drapery on the side-front is caught up under a charming braided motif. The lining is of rose-colored louisine. This model is priced at $55.

The knee-length evening wrap is more and more seen. An unusually lovely one of this type is illustrated in the lower corner of page 62. The turquoise blue silk brocaded in silver harmonizes wonderfully with the trimming of pearl monkey—a fur that had a rage in Paris last summer and was first imported by the shop that is showing this model. The hair is long and soft and has the gray lights seen in the guinea hen. The deep shawl collar narrows at the large button fastening into a trimming band which gathers up the skirt fullness into pannier form. The lining is of gold brocade. Price, $150.

A YOUNG GIRL'S DINNER FROCK

The charm of the young girl's dinner frock lies in its simplicity, quaintness, and youthfulness. A model combining these three essentials is sketched in the middle of page 62. Yellow chiffon is draped over the kimono shoulder and caught at the normal waist-line by an oblong, yellow satin buckle with a fluffy puff in the center. The V-shaped décolleté back and front is partly filled by a vest of shirred chiffon. The straight, yellow satin skirt is round length and has a hem that is only basted so that it may be easily shortened or lengthened. The panniers separate in front and are so arranged in the back as to hide the opening of the frock. This model costs $25 and may be ordered in white and several other evening colors.

Where is the woman who would not like to pick a rose in June and be able to wear it through the coming winter without having it fade or lose its fragrance? That is what some artists in a little village in Hungary have made possible, or nearly possible, through a secret scientific process. They are making artificial flowers that look, feel, and smell exactly like the flowers themselves. They call them preserved, for it is almost impossible to believe that they are not real when one touches them and feels the cool dampness of the petals and then smells the individual perfume of each flower. They are made up into different groups and combinations suitable for wearing and for decoration.

The bunches of violets are a beautiful shade of purple, and the concentrated violet odor lasts six months when worn in the open air. They have the soft, velvety appearance of the real violet, and the shade is one which is seldom found in imitations. The price of $2.50 is reasonable for the exquisite product; in fact, the prices never exceed those asked for the best artificial flowers, and in some cases they are less expensive. Another group is composed of three rosebuds and is called a "Bridesmaid's" bouquet. It comes in three colors, the yellow of the tea rose, a delicate pink, and a slightly deeper pink. The stems and leaves all add to the appearance of reality, and the perfume is absolutely perfect. Price, $1.50. A large rose with one bud for the corsage is made in several colors, and costs $1.50. The preserved carnations used for decoration are a great economy. They sell for $3 a dozen, about what one pays for hot-house flowers in winter, and if they are put away carefully they can be used over and over again. The daybreak carnations, white, delicately flecked with Maréchal Niel. All these preserved flowers when placed in the sun have the transparency of the real blossoms.

Besides these preserved flowers, this same importer has some cloth imitations in which the color combinations are much more beautiful than those usually seen; also more care is given to the details. His Viennese nosegays, small, conventional bouquets, are lovely. One has a center of deep pink crab-apple blossoms surrounded by tiny sprays of purple heliotrope. A bouquet of Austrian field roses is most attractive for one-half high, and sell for 35 cents each.

One of the large and old-established shops is showing many novelties in the way of table decorations and place-cards suitable for Thanksgiving parties, both formal and informal.

An oblong, gilt-edged place-card with enough space for the name costs 30 cents a quire; at the additional cost of 20 cents a quire one's monogram may be stamped on it, and for 50 cents extra the monogram may be illuminated to correspond with the color scheme which is to be followed in the table decorations.

The time-honored turkey appears with tail wide spread above a narrow white place-card. Lithographed, these cards are priced at 60 cents a dozen, but if hand-painted they cost from $2.50 to $3.

Another attractive oblong card is one with Thanksgiving greetings prettily written upon it. It folds through the middle so that one half acts as a stand, and the balance contains the words. These cost 60 cents a dozen.

A hand-painted figure of a Colonial dame carrying in her hands a tray with a turkey on it makes a charming addition to the table. It stands about six inches high with a piece of cardboard on the back to keep it erect. Price, $3 a dozen.

Cunning, indeed, are the china dolls, eight and a half inches high, that are dressed in hats and frocks of colored crêpe paper and carry triumphantly a college flag. For a dinner given to or by the college girl or boy nothing could be more attractive as a souvenir, especially at this football season. Most of the colleges are represented in the stock carried, and those that are not can be ordered within four days' time. Price, 25 cents each.

many occasions. A dozen small roses in a variety of colors are so arranged and shaded that they melt into one another in a most charming way and are equally beautiful against any background. Another nosegay is composed of June roses combined with lavender flowers and delicate leaves. These bouquets sell for $1 apiece. Another corsage novelty which is quite a fad abroad is a large black velvet rose which sells for $2.

FOR THANKSGIVING PARTIES

Now is the time of the year when one is on the lookout for attractive boxes in which to put small presents and little favors. One shop has just gotten up a little box which is particularly appropriate for Thanksgiving or Christmas. It is painted by hand, and a fat, rather conventionalized turkey sits in dignity on the cover. These could be used to hold a slice of fruit cake, or on the table filled with candy. They are so attractive that they make a cunning little favor in themselves. The boxes are three inches square and one and

SMART FASHIONS for LIMITED INCOMES

be knocked together." Others say, "Oh, copies of good hats that look quite as smart as those costing twice as much can be picked up in the lesser shops."

As a matter of fact, it depends on the "dress sense" of the individual. If a woman has taste and knows instinctively what is chic, she may safely buy an untrimmed hat and either place a bit of trimming on it herself or direct its trimming with good results. Another woman following such a method would have the dowdiest sort of a hat. She would not know a good shape to begin with, and then the chances are she would overload it with trimming—and in hat lore there is no greater error.

VOGUE SUGGESTS

Now we suggest this: Let the woman who has the knack hunt trimmed or untrimmed hats in the shops; sometimes one good one may be found in an otherwise impossible collection. Let the woman who knows she cannot safely depend on herself to say how the thing is to be done, but who knows when it is right, put herself in the hands of a clever milliner of parts.

"Easier said than done," you say. Possibly. But in almost all places such a milliner can be found. A few suggestions, a picture to follow, are just the inspiration needed to produce a

Concerning the All-Important Question of the Right Hats, and the Pros and Cons as to the Cost Thereof

A direct descendant of the poke bonnet for to-day's debutante really smart hat for little or nothing. For it is the ideas which cost money, not the materials—and it is ideas we can give you. Some charming ideas are embodied in the hats shown on these pages, and we would be glad to suggest an able milliner in New York who would duplicate these models reasonably, the prices varying, of course, according to the kind and quantity of material.

Hats, as though wishing not to be outdone by dresses in the number of materials they combine, appear in most attractive combinations this season. Plush and velvet, velvet and fur, velvet and satin, are all used. The hat at the top of this page has a crown and upper brim of black velvet and a facing of white plush. This, though a smart as well as a generally becoming shape, depends for its chic on the combination of color, the combination of materials, and the rather rakish tilt of the long white ostrich feather. Where we used to insist on full feathers, we now demand the slenderer sort with a full "head." This model also shows the new tendency to let the hair show a little at the side—a fashion generally becoming, especially now when such an attractive line is given by the low coiffure that completely covers the ears.

But what has hair-dressing to do with hats? Everything. The newest hat set on an old-fashioned coiffure is deprived of its chic.

One completes the other; their relation must be most considered. Just as it is unwise to be fitted for a new gown in an old pair of corsets, so it is a mistake not to have the hair arranged à la mode when buying a new hat.

The turban in question can be made of white plush and black velvet and trimmed with a fancy plume in either black or white for $14. Should one have a plume which is suitable and in good condition, the cost would be considerably lessened.

SUITING THE HAT TO THE GOWN

The more generally useful hat, one suitable for luncheon and reception, or for use with a tailored suit, is shown at the bottom of this page. This four-cornered hat could be of plush or beaver with the soft, beret crown of velvet. Amber beaver with crown of brown and wing of amber would rival a dashing black and white combination. Such a model could be made in either black and white or black and amber for $12.

Since gowns arrogated to themselves so much vividness of color, hats are as a rule of rather dark materials. Black velvet, velour plush, and beaver are much used, those with the rough surface predominating. Black with white is still greatly used, but the white is usually subordinate, generally appearing as a facing. Other shades used for this purpose are the mellow café au lait or a dull amber—something a little brighter than tan that matches in tone the lace yoke and ruffles of the gown.

THE BONNET OF OUR GRANDMOTHERS

What is more picturesque than the poke bonnet? Only its rightful descendant, the charming but smaller bonnet of to-day. The middle sketch on this page shows one of these which, if made of mole-colored silk banded with light-colored brocaded silk and French seal, would be suitable for reception or

The beret crown falls softly over the angles of the quatre-corne brim

"DRESS SENSE" IN HATS

Some women have an instinct which tells them not only what is good style in millinery, but also what will suit them best, while others who are as well gowned never wear smart hats. This is partly because they do not know how to select and wear them, and partly because, comparatively, there are fewer good hats than good dresses. Therefore, since chance is the chief factor in their choice, they are more apt to miss than to hit the right hat.

Since even with unlimited means the right hat is no easy achievement, infinite discretion must be exercised when the income is limited. In the latter case it is hard to generalize, especially to generalize helpfully. Some smart women who dress on nothing a year say, "Have one or two good hats, and let the rest evening wear. It would cost $12 and upward, according to the fur used. Of more durable materials, felt with a band of fur, it is ideal for motoring. For this a special price of $10 only is asked. Estimates could be given for other combinations, according to the materials desired. It is a most attractive girlish model and one which need not be expensive. But a word: only the girl with the piquant face should attempt it.

FUR POMPONS A MODISH VAGARY

The hat shown at the bottom of this page is of white plush with the big crown and small brim of the season. The trimming is formed of two rather heavy pompons or wired brushes of fur incongruously but attractively caught by pink roses. This is a model suitable for an older woman as well as a young girl. To have it made would cost in the neighborhood of $15, but closer estimates could be made according to the size of the pompons. The hat may be of black with white, or vice versa.

THE TIME, THE PLACE, AND THE HAT

No greater mistake can be made than to wear the wrong hat at the wrong time. With tailored suits, hats of a simple character should be worn, and feathers are not permissible. It is well, too, that they be small or of medium size. For semi-tailored, reception, and restaurant gowns the larger hat trimmed with aigrettes, or even small feathers, is permissible, but it is better taste to reserve really large hats with abundant plumes for the elaborate reception or afternoon costume.

A semi-tailored model trimmed with wings or fur pompons, which may be worn alike with a tailored or a semi-tailored suit, is the first necessity. A large hat with a feather trimming may also serve a double purpose for both reception and evening wear. These two hats may take the place of four, if well chosen. In addition, there may be one evening hat and an indestructible motor hat, the former a bit of an extravagance, the latter almost a necessity.

THE GOWNS ILLUSTRATED

The simplicity of the three gowns on this page commends them to the woman of small income. The first shows a clever combination of brocaded and plain material. As but little of the brocade is needed, it is an economical model to copy.

The velvet gown, which requires but a few yards of material to make, gains distinction by an immaculate vest of white hemstitched chiffon or fine batiste. Careful brushing of the velvet and the renewal of the vest repay a hundred fold in such a costume.

A trifle of gold embroidered chiffon is used for the clever overdrapery of the evening gown. Remnants may be picked up inexpensively. With a rich bit of stuff, deftly handled, an old charmeuse gown is transformed as if by magic.

The Directoire coat of a suit of dull green cloth has a long, square-cut back oddly ornamented with braid of the same color applied in circular designs resembling the pattern of a Chinese textile. Notable, after a prolonged swathing of the ankles, is the bell-like flare of the skirt, and the big, soft collar

The severe silhouette of a suit of garnet cloth is relieved by a short, plaited kirtle. The Russian blouse is trimmed in natural colored marten which drops in long loops below the waist-line. The skirt, in contrast to that at the left, narrows at the bottom and gives an appearance of being slightly baggy

This frock of black satin shows the flowered sleeves for which this house was sponsor. They are of black chiffon to correspond with the plaited guimpe, and are embroidered with brilliant flowers. A heavy cord girdles the waist and is knotted on the hip—much in the fashion of the medieval cordelière

NEGLIGÉES WHICH can be MADE at MODERATE COST

MANY a charming and costly negligée from the shops is most simple to make. One—it was just a simple affair of pink charmeuse draped up a trifle on one side and bordered with white swans-down—cost one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Of course it wasn't the materials, it was the design, the idea, that made it not only costly but lovely. But once having the idea, it would be simple to follow. It's just this—ideas—that distinguish Vogue negligées.

For instance, No. 2214/22 is a new winter model from "Bob Marie," particularly charming and with an elusiveness that is delightfully feminine. It was expensive in Paris and more expensive to land, yet it could be reproduced for a modest sum. It is made of palest pink satin charmeuse with a short train. Its prettiest feature is the overdrapery of shadow lace caught at the back under a bow. A delightful thing about a negligée is that it need not fit if the lines are good and the sewing fine.

Surely a modest sum for a gown which costs a hundred or so in Paris.

THE FASHION OF OVERDRAPERY

Tunics, overdrapery, coat effects, of transparent stuffs, though always pretty for negligées, are this season unusually fashionable. A simple net overdress, bordered with fur, will do wonders for a plain gown. Nos. 1861/22, 2042/22, and 2161/22 are all examples of this style. Made of chiffon cloth or net, they achieve the prettiest effects.

For the boudoir such a rest robe as No. 2208/22 would be charming. It could be made of crêpe de Chine, and with collar and cuffs of batiste embroidered by hand. Both are materials which will stand tubing successfully. To make it would cost about $8.

STEEPLECHASING in the PYRENEES

PERHAPS it is because we usually associate good jumping with a crowd of fashionable spectators and a background of flower-decked magnificence that we are apt to be sceptical regarding the merits of a Concours Hippique in the heart of the Hautes-Pyrénées. But just as the country fisherman can carry off the coveted trout on the primitive bent pin, so can the marvelous skill of the French cavalry officer manifest itself in the midst of the simplest surroundings.

The little village of Pouzac, which lies on the main route from Pau to Luchon in the High Pyrenees, was recently the scene of one of the most interesting jumping competitions of the season. The fences and water jumps were remarkably stiff, and the three times covered course, intricate.

Officers from the garrison at Tarbes were the principal participants. The crowning event of the afternoon was the high jumping competition. A corps de chasse from a neighboring château contributed inspiring and somewhat barbaric music.

The grandstand was a simple affair of boards through which the wind whistled gaily, and a hastily constructed shed behind a cow-yard served as a betting booth. Society was represented by a handful of relations and friends of the competing officers, while the adjoining roofs and trees groaned under a load of enthusiastic villagers. An ancient and decrepit peasant displayed with intense pride the racing numbers, and one of the most benign and interested spectators was the village curé, who attended the concours in flowing clerical robes. The judges were portly country magnates.

No sooner was the last cup awarded than a crowd of peasants with picks and shovels began to demolish the earth banks, hurdles, and rail fences. The water jump was then hastily filled in, and before the grandstand was empty, a herd of cows were grazing over the field.

WHAT THEY READ

The Merits, and More Especially the Demerits, of the Novelized Drama and Likewise of the Dramatized Novel—Just Plain Novels

CURRENT "novelized" plays with those repellent illustrations made from stage scenes seem to prove that folk of today have not the habit of reading the contemporary drama "in the closet," as the quaint old phrase went. Few of us obey the Scriptural injunction to enter the closet, shut the door, and say our prayers, and perhaps even fewer retire in like fashion with the plays of the present day stage. There must, however, be persons who read the "novelized" plays, else the publishers would not keep on soiling perfectly good, if rather cheap, white paper with these perfunctory examples of fiction.

Perhaps we get the key to the situation of why most novelized plays are so bad when we remember that it is only the bad plays that are novelized and that no one, for instance, should presume to novelize the plays of Mr. Bernard Shaw. It is terrifying merely to think of what would happen to the presumptuous being who should commit such a sacrilege. Better were it for him that a millstone be hanged about the neck and he cast into the sea than that he should encounter Mr. Shaw's waked wrath for so heinous an offense. Besides, how could one of Mr. Shaw's prefaces be novelized?—and all of us who read Mr. Shaw in the closet agree that three times out of four his prefaces are the best part of his plays. If Mr. Shaw were not the cleverest human being on the planet one would be tempted to suggest to him a volume of "Plays I Might Have Written," with the plays themselves carefully omitted and the adorning prefaces published in full. There is really no reason in literature why one of Mr. Shaw's prefaces when published should be followed by a play, any more than there is that the stage production of one of his plays should be preceded by the reading of its preface to the audience. It might prove interesting. As a matter of fact, when current modern plays are good enough they do not need to be novelized to find closet readers. Shaw's "Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant," are quite as well worth reading as the cleverest and most detaining novels, and in some measure the like is true of the best plays by Pinero and Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. Galsworthy's plays need no recasting for the closet reader. Charles Henry Meltzer's delightful translation of Hauptman's "Sunken Bell," although published thirteen years ago, is still selling, as it richly deserves to sell, and William J. Henderson's libretto to Walter Damrosch's opera of "Cyrano de Bergerac," written ten years ago, is likely to be quite as popular. Translations of "Chantecler" are read for pleasure, and are likely to be in demand years hence for that purpose, and not merely as a preparation for seeing the stage production.

Not so long ago there were not so many good current plays to be read. Men and women now somewhat short of old age must recall the pain with which they struggled through the French comedies of Scribe and Labiche, Labiche and Delacour, Octave Feuillet and their contemporaries of the 60's and 70's. You may still pick them up at second hand with the penciled interlineations of young readers. The best French plays of that day were inferior in poetic charm to Rostand's, but vastly more sparkling than most things now written for the American stage. We folk of English speech have long ruthlessly despoiled the French stage for our own ends, but have been prone to ruin what we stole. Even the Restoration dramatists of greatest repute were far from graceful thieves, and it is to the credit of modern taste that their adaptations have utterly vanished from the stage, and can not be popularized for the closet despite the zeal of some critics. The reading of the Restoration dramatists, except for a few of their plays, is an acquired taste that most of us ought not to acquire, however valuable it may be for systematic students of dramatic literature.

WHAT THEY READ

We are, nevertheless, getting some readable American plays, such as those of Mr. De Mille, a few of Mr. Mackaye's, and the best of Mr. Hagedorn's. It will be a pity, by the way, if the public misses—in book form the delicious little symbolistic drama written by Mr. Hagedorn and played before in the open air in the dusk of a stormy June evening by a few young women at Radcliffe College. Richard Harding Davis's plays are good, but do not seem likely to rival his stories in the affections of readers, and Hamlin Garland has been hardly more fortunate in his irruptions into the drama.

Then there are others of slightly longer standing. Has everybody forgotten the late George Parsons Lathrop's charming poetical dramatization of a Tennysonian idyll, produced with some success on the New York stage nearly twenty-five years ago? It should still make good reading. The American problem plays of to-day seldom charm the reader, however they may enthrall theatre audiences.

In old libraries one is apt to find many leather-bound volumes, marked "Plays," and containing collections of dead and gone things at which our ancestors of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries were wont to laugh or weep when their scenes were displayed upon the stage. Charles Lamb set the fashion of reading old plays, and the world owes him a debt of gratitude for many valuable things rescued from oblivion, but Charles was not a man of his own time, and the moderns who accept as pure gold all the iron pyrites that he so jealously treasured will wake up some day to their own real poverty. Dodsley's "Old Plays" include a deal of archaic richness, but likewise a deal of matter as unsuited to the closet as to the modern stage. Furthermore, though whisper it not in academic circles, the old miracle plays and mysteries are in great measure very dull reading, as most really honest folk will admit.

There are persons who soulfully profess to enjoy Shakespeare more keenly in the closet than upon the stage, but mostly these are the kind of folk who profess to regard "Don Quixote" as essentially tragic. Along with old Sam Johnson's sturdy advice, "Clear your minds of cant," should go, "Don't be a prig," and the person who pretends to find a good play better to read than to see, is certainly bound in that direction. There is a sound stage tradition of reading and interpretation that makes Shakespeare as done by any company above the degree of rank barnstormers a more satisfying thing as a literary treat than the kind of reading that most of us do for ourselves. What is true of Shakespeare is equally true of his successors in this day and at any time between his death and the present decade of the twentieth century. Any tolerably actable play, even such a marvel as Shelley's "Cenci," or so moving and poetical a thing as "The Blot on the Scutcheon," starts into an intense life when presented by a company of fair actors, such as it can have for only the most imaginative closet reader. This, no doubt, is one reason why we have comparatively few plays published for general circulation, and why Shakespeare alone of all the dramatists continues to be a "best seller."

THE NOVELS OF THE MOMENT

A ROMANCE OF BILLY-GOAT HILL, by ALICE HEGAN RICE, is a novel containing some of the elements that enabled "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" to confer sudden fame upon the author. This time the story is concerned at once with the slum folk and with the old native whites of social position. The author shows herself at home in both classes of society. Her young woman is a delicious creature, full of Kentucky fire and feminine courage and loyalty. Her young gentleman is somewhat less interesting, though good enough, while her fat and easy-going old Kentucky gentleman, first presented to us in the act of compounding a mint julep upon a recipe that some folks might criticize, is a genuine creation. As to the slum boy and his friends, he and they are done con amore, as might be expected from the creator of Mrs. Wiggs. The crime that plays an important part in the hero's fortunes is well conceived, and realistically depicted. Not a great story this, but a good one, with plenty of humor and no lack of human feeling. (New York: The Century Company, $1.25 net.)

THE FLAW IN THE CRYSTAL, by MAY SINCLAIR, departs somewhat from this highly successful young novelist's accustomed style and subjects. In this story, hardly more than a novellette in length, she has used as her central theme a phase of current mysticism. The reader suspects from the opening chapter that the story is to be one of illicit love with the accustomed accompaniments. It turns out to be a very different thing, in fact quite the opposite thing. The woman with whom a badgered and recreant man falls in love employs her occult powers in restoring him and his wife to affectionate relations. She cures also another man of his insane delusions, but in doing so finds herself the victim of those same errors. Struggling to free herself, and finally triumphant, she reaches a conclusion as to "the flaw in the crystal" that has brought about so disastrous a result from her well-meant efforts in the second case. Miss Sinclair's book, instead of preaching loose sexual relations, inculcates a morality above that of convention, but not at war with convention. There is little or no action in the story. It is, indeed, rather a succession of subtly presented studies in mind-cure by appeal to the Divine Healer. The thing is so well done that intelligent readers, whether they accept or reject its implied teachings, will find it of rare interest. (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., $1.20 net.)

THE COST OF IT, by ELENOR MORAUNT, is a more than usually strong story dealing with the fortunes of a young man who has a taint of dusky blood, and is called upon to administer a sugar estate belonging to his family in an eastern island. This island is under British rule, but is inhabited by a human mixture of many colors and varied speech. A good deal of the talk in the story is a corrupted French to which the author applies the name Creole, but there is hardly enough of the patois to disturb a reader who has even a smattering of genuine French. The dramatis personae include British officers on duty at the island, civilians and their wives, making up the usual

NOTABLE NEW NOVELS

A Document of Life

The Most Remarkable Autobiography of the Decade

THE GIRL WITH THE ROSEWOOD CRUTCHES. Anonymous

Here is a fragment of life indeed—life from a brand new angle in the world of literature. It is the document of the struggle of a girl bound to crutches, hopelessly lame. She didn't want to seem odd, it was a humiliation to be pitied. She was human and she demanded love and won it too. These are by no means pages of tragedy, but those of conquest, the conquest of an indomitable will over all but unconquerable circumstances. The Girl tells her own story, simply and graphically, from the days when she led a life of dreams and dull inertia in her own town, through the time of her going to New York and finding compensations in its harsh realities, up to her triumphs in music and love. Frontispiece by Harrison Cady. $1.20 net; postage 11 cents.

It will have a million readers.

IN THE VORTEX. By Clive Holland

A story of heart-throbs and gaiety in the Latin Quarter of Paris. Real Bohemian life with all its lights and shadows is here depicted by a master hand. The author of "Trilby" has not given a more charming picture of the studios, the cafés, and the motley population of the Quartier Latin. The reader is drawn into the vortex of poignant human emotions, of mad gaieties, and sober tragedy. The love of Elbert Glynn, a young American artist, for the appealing little model, Jeanette, is portrayed with tenderness and delicate charm. This novel is the most important that Mr. Holland has yet written, and one which is sure to be widely read and discussed. $1.25 net; postage 11 cents.

MY ESCAPES. By A Bachelor

A rarely humorous story of a young bachelor who, by a legacy from a wealthy uncle, is suddenly raised from poverty to affluence, and escapes from a dozen women, ranging from the chorus to the nobility, to whom, in confidential moments he has promised marriage "if he could only afford it." The book is full of chuckles from beginning to end—if you have read "Three Men in a Boat," you will appreciate this. It's the most amusing book of the year. $1.20 net; postage 10 cents.

A Delightful Romance for the Younger Set

THE MAID OF MIDDIES' HAVEN. By

Gabrielle E. Jackson, author of "Three Graces," etc. A fascinating tale of a sweet-natured, lovable young girl who is the guest of a friend near the Naval Academy at Annapolis and becomes a moving figure in its social life. She takes part in the various "hops" and "proms" and is an interested partisan spectator of the football games and crew races in which the middies participate. She is wooed by two of the cadets, and such are the qualities of both of the men that it is a difficult matter for her to choose between them. She does choose, however, and the story ends to the eminent satisfaction of the reader. Mrs. Jackson is a well-established favorite with the younger set, and this, her latest book, will be eagerly sought for. It is by far the best she has written. Illustrated. $1.20 net; postage 10 cents.

COLOR HARMONY IN DRESS

By George Ashdown
Audsley

Which colors are most becoming to you? How can you combine colors in your dress for the best effect, both in relation to each other and to your complexion? Can you match color with any degree of assurance? Every woman of good taste realizes the value of color harmony in her dress, but most women rely on instinct, rather than on the laws governing color combinations, to achieve this end. What colors shall I wear? and what colors can I wear? are questions answered with authority in COLOR HARMONY IN DRESS. With this book as a guide, you need not be in doubt as to whether the color arrangement you wish to use will be becoming. Besides, it will suggest clever color schemes that others will adopt. The book contains charts that make the subject perfectly clear. 75 cents net; postage 6 cents.

WHAT THEY READ

army post society as it exists in oriental towns under British rule, natives of pure and mixed breed, Frenchmen, and a host of nondescript idlers. Among the British residents the taint of native or negro blood is fatal, but the young hero of the tale, educated at Eton, and brought up in British upper class society at home, confides his origin to the man who receives him on his arrival, and actually maintains some sort of social relations in the town while living on the estate with his mother, a flighty little woman with a touch of the tarbrush. Perhaps the unusual local color must be held to account in large measure for the interest of the book, but interest it certainly has, and the story is told with undoubted skill. (New York: Sturgis & Walton Company, $1.35 net.)

THE ANTAGONISTS by E. TEMPLE

THURSTON, is a distinctive, though hardly a distinguished story, and it deserves the former title in that it is in large measure concerned with characters under nineteen years of age, though it is not by any means a book for children. Much of the story is occupied with the adolescence of the young hero, though his mother, a nicely studied character admirably contrasted with her husband, occupies an important place in the tale. By some miracle of good taste, Mr. Thurston has shown us, without being offensive, the premature education in matters emotional of a boy eleven years old whose instructress is a woman nearly twenty years his senior. Successive episodes of the tale impinge upon the youth whom the author seeks to picture, and he is finally brought to his own love-making, which again is delicately managed. His father, who had been in a sense the antagonist of his wife, is also that of the boy, for he is an excellent man without imagination or humor, and therefore hopelessly shut away from his wife and his son. It craves a higher art than Mr. Thurston's to deal with so difficult a subject as that he has chosen in this volume, and most readers will agree that while he has achieved an interesting study, he has not made of it half its possibilities. There is some slovenly writing in the story, as witness these sentences on immediately successive pages: "Notwithstanding this acquisition, Pilgrim had to be thrashed and the pain of it led him to suppose that chasing these fascinating things which ran like lightning into the hedges was not considered in the same light as he regarded them." "No matter how strong they may be, a dog will ever mould his instincts to the needs of his master." (New York: D. Appleton & Co., $1.30 net.)

THE ARM-CHAIR AT THE INN,

by F. HOPKINSON SMITH, contains a most delightful opening chapter embodying a description of an old inn discovered by Mr. Smith in Normandy, the resort of many persons engaged in the arts, and of some devoted to adventure. Some of the persons belonging to the little coterie tell of their adventures, and Mr. Smith assures us that what they tell is true. Those who met in this country, twenty years ago or more, Herbert Ward, a companion of Stanley's in Africa, will easily recognize him as "Herbert the sculptor" of these tales. Mr. Ward's adventures in Africa, Australia, Borneo, and elsewhere, were characteristic of the man, and none was more remarkable than his sudden engagement to the daughter of an American multi-millionaire as he came by ship to this country still bearing upon him the tan of the Congo. Ward first dawned upon New York in a modest address at a Fellowship Club dinner.

He married here and went abroad to live in a palace in the heart of fashionable London. He now has a noble estate in France and is a recognized master in sculpture. The head of an old woman which he contributes to the illustrations of this volume is admirably done, and strongly sculptural in suggestion. The stories and talk in the book are entertaining, though the text is hardly up to the promise of the delicious illustrations. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $1.30 net.)

THE NEW HUMPTY-DUMPTY,

by DANIEL CHAUCER, gives a new turn to the old subject of a puppet prince and those who intrigue to place him on the throne. Here is not the approved company of old retainers, desperate villains, adventurous American youths, enamored princesses, innkeepers, guards, and pretty chambermaids, but an entirely different set of characters. A philosophic English lower middle-class socialist writer, an Irishman with a foreign title, an English lord and his able wife, an American multi-millionaire, the puppet prince, and a few others help to make the story go. Mr. Chaucer writes with something less than the vivid simplicity of his great namesake, but with ease and picturesque effect. It is far too much to say, however, that his puppet prince is to be mentioned along with the madman of supposedly royal blood whom George Meredith has created. (New York: John Lane Company, $1.25 net.)

THE LADY DOC, by CAROLINE

LOCKHART, is an ambitious study of a curious and interesting character, and a tale of many adventures in the West of a wilder day than the present. It must be owned that the character of Dr. Emma Harpe is more boldly conceived than successfully executed, though the execution is by no means to be scoffed at. Of other characters in the tale one or two men and as many women are done with good effect. On the whole, however, in undertaking what was intended to be a larger thing than the brilliant "Me-Smith" of a year or more ago, the author has not accomplished so good a thing. (Philadelphia and London: J. B. Lippincott Company, $1.25 net.)

DADDY LONG-LEGS, by JEAN

WEBSTER, is an idyllic little love-story of an unusual sort, told in the letters of one party to the sentimental contract. The letters, after the reader has grown accustomed to the shock of the first two or three, seem natural enough for a college girl, neither dull nor abnormally clever. There are amusing caricatures by way of illustration, the work of the author. (New York: The Century Company, $1 net.)

LESS THAN THE DUST, by M.

A. HAMILTON, is a rather long novel mostly dealing with English folk living temporarily in Canada. They have, to give local color, the background of Montreal, though the aspects and society of the city are not strongly insisted upon. The merit of the book lies in the ingenious situation contrived by the author, and in the double contrast of two pairs of characters, two brothers and two sisters. One of the sisters tells the story autobiographically, but does not manage to interest the reader in her own personality so much as in those of the other three belonging to the quartet. A fifth character is a rather happy variant of the vulgar but loyal and self-devoted friend. There is a lack of distinction in the style, and of convincing naturalness in the dialogue. Montreal will not be flattered with the picture of itself here presented. (Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.35 net.)

THE MARSHAL, by MARY SHIPMAN ANDREWS, strangely links Virginia and France, and has the curious distinction of treating the Third Napoleon, in the days of his unsuccessful attempt to make himself master of France, as a heroic and attractive character. The glimpse that the author gives us of Henry Clay is a good deal more inspiring, however, than aught she has to show us of Louis Napoleon. As a whole, the story drags a good deal, and it can hardly continue the reputation that its author won with "The Perfect Tribute." Mr. Castaigne's illustrations are singularly unequal. His frontispiece, an ambitious picture, is out of drawing and perspective, and the two figures on horseback in another picture are almost absurd. Three other of the illustrations, however, are effective. (The Bobbs-Merrill Company, $1.35 net.)

WHIPPEN, by FREDERICK ORIN BARTLETT, is a clever little skit based upon the notion that in this age of extravagance and glittering show the art of selling luxuries lies in knowing how to persuade people that the highest priced thing is the best. Mere accident teaches Whippen this momentous truth when he is a mere "tuppenny" grocer's clerk, and we leave him at the end of the story rolling home in his limousine, the most expensive he could buy. He is immensely prosperous as the maker of candy that sells at $1.50 a pound. As Boston boasts a superlative confectioner, the story not inappropriately comes from that city. (Boston: Small, Maynard & Co., 50 cents, postage 6 cents.)

FRIAR TUCK, by ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON, a thick volume of nearly 450 pages, embodies a new set of Happy Hawkins stories. This time the unifying element is the Rev. John Carmichael of Wyoming, a missionary, acquainted with the ways and skilled in the arts of the cowboy. The parson's adventures and those of his friends and enemies are told in the accustomed language of Happy Hawkins, and are decorated with his habitual humor. (The Bobbs-Merrill Company, $1.25 net.)

THE SIGN AT SIX, by STEWART EDWARD WHITE, is a manifest pot-boiler, quite unworthy of the man who writes so admirably about real persons and things. Fortunately, however, Mr. White can hardly write ill, and "The Sign at Six," frank extravaganza though it is, retains some of the author's native realism, and has no little of his humor and observation. He is forgiven upon condition that he does not offend in this fashion again. (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company, $1.25 net.)

ATHENA UNDERWEAR

For Women, Misses and Children

EVERY thinking woman knows that however perfect her own figure may be, unless she wears truly form-fitting underwear, there is sure to be trouble in the fit of her gowns.

Athena—the new knit underwear—is correctly tailored in every part—from the shaped shoulders to the tapered ankles. It fits the woman as though it were a part of her. The trimming, shaping and sizing are such that she has no difficulty in getting her garment.

Here are some of the features certain to appeal to a woman who cares about her appearance and comfort.

Athena Underwear has a Patented Seat that gives extra room where it is needed most.

It has a special Stay that prevents the garment from stretching over the shoulders.

The trimming is put on in an improved way, giving exquisite daintiness that is not lessened by washing.

And remember, please, that the Athena method of sizing makes it possible to have right fitting garments for all types of figures from very slender to very full.

Athena Underwear is shown in all shapes and fabrics by leading dealers everywhere at prices you usually pay.

Some of the special Athena shapes are illustrated.

He sealed them up in bronze-steel guns. Then revolved the guns for 60 minutes in a heat of 550 degrees.

Thus the moisture in the grain was turned to steam, and brought to tremendous pressure.

Then the guns were shot, and the grains exploded. They came out eight times normal size—like these

The blast broke every food granule, so the grains could easily digest. That was this expert's object.

The explosion created a myriad cells, surrounded by thin, toasted walls.

The terrific heat gave a taste like toasted nuts.

Prof. Anderson found that he had created the most fascinating foods in existence.

Now countless people every morning eat them with sugar and cream. Or they mix them with fruit.

THE ECONOMICAL ORIENTAL RUG

The Purchase of a Real Oriental Rug
Is Like an Excellent Investment in Real Estate—It Cannot Decrease, and
It May Perhaps Increase in Value

THERE is no reason why, from motives of economy, oriental rugs should be omitted from house furnishings. Of all carpets they wear the longest, and, if well selected, they often become more beautiful with time.

The Kermanshah is considered by some authorities the finest rug woven on Persian looms; for actual beauty they place it next to the silk Persian. A Kermanshah possessing the characteristic colors put in with genuine vegetable dyes may be bought as low as $35. Rugs bought for this price are three feet by six, or more often four feet by seven.

THE SUPREME KERMANSHAH

The light colors and fine patterns of the Kermanshah are ideally adapted to boudoirs and drawing-rooms. The ground is usually ivory in tone, and the design is woven in pink, rose, and old blue. Small Kermanshahs are just the thing to use before the dressing table, or the piano, or as a table throw. These sell as low as $8.50, but in that case, of course, do not exceed two feet in length. Antique Kermanshah and Tabriz rugs are hard to find. A real old Tabriz similar to the Kermanshah in color but of more definite design is sometimes sold as low as $25, but it is then never more than three feet in length.

Next to the Kermanshah, the Saruk is the finest modern rug. The colors are stronger than the Kermanshah or Tabriz, and rich reds and deep blues predominate. Floral designs are often woven against a dark blue ground and tones of ivory relieve the heaviness of color. Floral designs in combination with medallions and odd geometric figures mark a Saruk unmistakably. This rug comes in a good many sizes from one three feet by five, which is priced at $35, to one twelve feet by twenty at prices in three figures. A fine Saruk, four feet by seven, can be bought for $45. It is well to note when purchasing Saruks that the large ones are better suited to rooms that are considerably longer than they are wide, as these rugs are seldom square.

THE INEXPENSIVE MOSUL

Mosul rugs are among the most inexpensive. They are also of Persian origin, although their name is taken from the Turkish town through which they reach the market. Mosuls are very durable, but they are heavy and coarse and dark in color. The warp and weft are of wool without the intermixture of cotton or jute. The ground of this rug is covered with an all-over pattern which often introduces a conventionalized palm-leaf design. A size five feet by six may be bought as low as $18.50.

The cheapness is accounted for by the coarse wool employed, and as there are consequently fewer knots to the inch, there is less need for skilled labor in the making. It is somewhat difficult to recognize a Mosul by its pattern because borders and motifs have been borrowed somewhat recklessly from other makes. Textures and patterns may be crude, but the colors are sure to be deep and warm. Mosuls are made in many sizes and shapes—squares, oblongs, and runners. Hall runners, which are usually three feet six inches wide and nine or twelve feet long, range in price from $22.50 to $45. The Mosul and Shiraz saddle bags, by the way, are known the world over. The Shiraz bags are considered the best made. They cost from $8.50 to $25.

The Bokhara rug, often known as the royal Bokhara because it was originally used by royalty only, is the most easily recognized of all the Eastern carpets; the elongated octagonals are too familiar to need comment. The pattern of this rug has been copied more successfully in domestic rugs than any other. It is of fine, strong wool, and its durability is proverbial. The ground color is a rich red, and the design blue and white with a touch of orange. An excellent rug of this kind, three feet by four, may be bought for $15.

The Daghestans were the first oriental rugs to come in quantities to this country. In the district bordering on the Caspian Sea, the weavers are doing their work to-day in much the same manner that their ancestors did it many centuries ago, though to a great extent trade conditions have made them a commercial rather than an art product.

SEEK OUT THE HONEST DEALER

In purchasing a Daghestan it is especially necessary to consult a reliable dealer who knows his rugs as a shoemaker does his last. The inferior Shirvan, because of a resemblance in pattern and color to the Daghestan, is often palmed off by dishonest dealers for a real Daghestan. The Daghestans are usually square, and are made in sizes from three feet to four feet six inches; they sell for from $15 to $35. A few oblong rugs of this kind appear now and then, and they may sometimes be picked up for as little as $12.50. Shirvans, which are also square, can be bought as low as $10.

The head of one of the largest rug shops in New York said recently, "In buying oriental rugs, spend as much money as you can afford, and economize on things that will last fewer years. A rug of standard color and weave is worth the price paid for it for years to come, and very often the value increases with time, for most eastern rugs grow softer and more glossy with use."

AN INTERESTING AND AUTHENTIC ANTIQUE SETTEE

To the Messrs. Sloane, New York

Dear Sirs:

I beg to state that the settee covered with needlework illustrated in my work on Old English Furniture, Fig. 60, Age of Walnut and sold by me to you, was purchased by me from Sir George Donaldson and with the exception of some of the toes, which in all of this walnut furniture have to be renewed owing to worms, is quite untouched and utterly genuine. I date it 1675, or within 5 years either way. A most beautiful and remarkable settee.

Yours faithfully,

Percy Macquoid,

Author of History of English Furniture.

Among important pieces of Antique Furniture offered for sale in our Division of Furniture and Decorations is the Settee illustrated above, to which Mr. Percy Macquoid refers in his History of English Furniture, Vol. II., page 65: "Fig. 60 is a long seat of stool form made to match the tall, cane-backed chairs of 1670 and originally cane-seated to carry a squab; in this instance the seat has been re-upholstered in needlework of the time."

OPERA PROMISES for the NEW YEAR

Far more pretentious is the scheme laid out by the Philadelphia - Chicago institution for operas not yet heard in America. It might be profitably imitated by those New York gentlemen who proclaim their grand opera "the best on earth." Barnum said the same thing about his circus, sometimes with truth, occasionally the reverse.

ANDREAS DIPPEL'S NEW OPERAS

Whatever Mr. Dippel may or may not have done—and it must be admitted that he has given us some rather ordinary opera—we cannot evade the facts pertaining to new operas for 1912-13 which he declares will be given.

In the French language he promises "Noël," by Baron Frederic d'Erlanger, and "Le Ranz des Vaches" (Kuhreigen), by Dr. Wilhelm Kienzl. The unheard Italian operas are "Conchita," from the pen of Riccardo Zandonai; "Cassandra," composed by Vittoria Gnechi; "I Dispettosi Amanti," written by Attilio Pachi, and Dr. Ludwig Rochlitzer's "Marietta." The work which has been anticipated for some time, and which will undoubtedly be produced before spring, is Carl Goldmark's "The Cricket on the Hearth." This opera will be sung in English—one more step on the road to English grand opera.

"I Quattro Rusteghi" (The Four Rustics), by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari; Mascagni's "Ysobel," which Messrs. Liebler & Company endeavored to give here two seasons ago in spite of the composer, and "Colonel Chabert," by Walter von Waltershausen, are available for presentation—providing the Philadelphia-Chicago Company has time to present them after finishing with its regular novelty schedule—most unlikely at the time of present writing.

Irene Scharrer, a new European pianist who makes her American debut this season

So much for the opera of our present musical season.

CONCERTS AND THEIR STARS

Turning to the concerts and concert artists, we behold them in quantity quite sufficient for every need. The individuals—at least, those whose names have a box-office value—who are to make music for the benefit of numerous audiences, are nearly all old-time favorites. Those whom we have never heard come to us waving aloft documentary evidence alleged to establish their pre-eminence.

Conspicuous in the front rank of concert stars are Mme. Marcella Sembrich, who returns, after a year abroad, for a tour to be devoted exclusively to concertizing (opera managers please take notice). Then there is Eugene Ysaye, the Belgian violinist with the wondrous tone. Those who haven't heard M. Ysaye since he was in America five years ago will welcome his return, and those who have never heard him have something to live for.

The pianist whose work is likely to arouse the liveliest discussion during the next few months is Leopold Godowsky, for some time a resident of Chicago, but in late years an inhabitant of Berlin. Mr. Godowsky is physically a small man; he is mild mannered and retiring. But when he seats himself at the keyboard of a piano his physical qualities sink into insignificance, and he shows his extraordinary accomplishments in a technical way.

In the western metropolis Mr. Godowsky is remembered for his love of assiduous practice. The newspapers of that city printed some amusing stories of the little pianist's persistency. He had a habit—said to be irritating to even non-sensitive nerves—of playing one

A Coupé of Unequalled Luxury and Utility

The Latest Development by the Oldest, the Largest, the Foremost Electric Automobile Manufacturers in the World

IMAGINE the most beautiful lines created by classic art built into being by the most exquisite craftsmanship known in modern automobile manufacture! Then you have a faint conception of the surpassing luxury, the beauty, comfort, richness and dignity of the Baker Electric Coupé.

With its increased roominess, its full limousine back, its longer wheel base and graceful, low-hung body lines, this magnificent new model thoroughly satisfies the public taste for a stylish yet conservative coupé.

On both interior and exterior have been lavished all the refinements of convenience and appointment demanded by so beautiful a car. This new model is built in two types—one with the control and steering levers operated from the rear seat, the other having wheel steer with controlling lever attached operated from left front seat.

In each type the front seats revolve, permitting the occupants to face forward or turn about. This revolving front-seat feature is an innovation and sets a new standard for convenience and comfort in electric automobiles. The front and front quarter windows are made exceptionally low, permitting easy view of the road from the rear seat.

To buy any electric before having a demonstration in this new Baker Coupé is to miss the highest attainment in superior service and refined electric automobile construction.

Winter

THE individuality and distinctiveness of the Baker Coupé are also notably exemplified in the Baker Brougham, pictured above. Aside from its stately elegance and luxury, its ample power and flexibility of control have established a standard of utility heretofore thought unattainable in an electric of the more commodious type.

The power transmission in the Baker is by the well-known Baker shaft drive—the one perfect transmission, representing the greatest advance in the evolution of the electric.

The even balance and resiliency of the chassis, with its patented spring suspension, contribute immeasurably to the easy riding qualities for which the Baker is famous. In design it is essentially a car of maximum strength at minimum weight; absence of superfluous structural load saves batteries, tires, etc., and increases mileage radius.

The Baker is the only electric equipped with a patented continuous torque controller which does not break the circuit, insuring gradual and uniform application of power, even if suddenly thrown on. The car will not plunge forward with a jerk; its speed will increase swiftly, smoothly and safely.

The steering gear is so simple and free in its action that a child can operate a Baker with perfect ease and safety. Two sets of brakes insure quick and dependable stopping of the car at all times.

The entire Baker mechanism is trouble proof; from every viewpoint of construction and operation, this is the one car to be chosen by either ladies or gentlemen. It affords clean, safe and thoroughly dependable travel without the slightest annoyance from mechanical details.

Every Baker is backed by the engineering and service support of the largest exclusively electric motor car plant in the world.

QUALITY SERVICE

Spring

DO not associate with the Baker your ideas on ordinary electric vehicles. The Baker is a genuine automobile, electrically driven—capable of any reasonable distance or speed requirement, equal to any grade, road or weather condition, and always ready for the most exacting service.

Years of use in the hands of thousands of people, from the boulevards of Boston to the formidable hills of Seattle, have demonstrated that the Baker stands far in the lead for all-around service efficiency. Likewise has it been proved that the Baker will travel farther on a single charge than any other car of equal battery rating, and even with this economy of current its motor holds the record for high power development.

Such superiorities as these give Baker users a real advantage over operators of the average electric; combined with the infinite care reflected in every detail of design, finish and appointment, they explain why the Baker today leads in number of cars sold.

THE BAKER is the car of silence—the most noiseless of all electrics. This is a significant characteristic, because noise means friction, friction means waste power, expense, trouble, short life.

Baker silence is tangible evidence of the correctness of Baker engineering. Into this superb car are concentrated the mechanical and electrical principles which fourteen years' experience has proved to be RIGHT.

Perhaps you are not versed in mechanics or electricity; that is the greatest of all reasons why the car you buy should be a Baker. If all electrics were bought on structural superiority, 95% of them would be Bakers.

EVERY ACTOR HIS DUE

Back in "The Great Divide," where none was incompetent, and Henry Miller and Miss Anglin, the stars, were splendid, the work of that capital actress, Laura Hope Crews, stood out brilliantly. She played Polly with such grace, humor, and polished neatness, that her every appearance was hailed with delight. She has been playing secondary rôles for a long time, with the technical equipment of a star. It is really time she had a full play for herself.

Surely none of us who saw "The Blue Bird" will forget Cecil Yapp's Cat, so feline, so sly, so lithe, so revengeful, nor poor Jacob Wendell's Dog, which was exactly the opposite. The rest of the players, good as they were, but carried the story. These two enjoyed independent existences, and still live independently in our memory. Similarly, in "The Million," a farce now touring the country, the acting of Taylor Holmes stands out, not because his part is more important, nor because he is so very much funnier than the rest, but because he has a real method of his own, a real acting style, which is a whole level above the ordinary technique of farce. Just so the work of Alan Pollock stood out in "Seven Days" and "What the Doctor Ordered."

THE STARS IN THEIR COURSES FIGHT

Other performances in more or less minor rôles which we shall not soon forget include Russ Whytal's as the old, sweet-hearted judge in "The Witching Hour," and John Findlay's as the old waiter in "You Never Can Tell." It is worth while noting that both these men are ripe in years and experience, and were able to give memorable performances of these parts because they had the fullness of technique and mellowness of method to grasp their opportunities. The same might be said of the superb performance by Louis Calvert of the Evangelical husband in "Don" at the New Theatre, or the eldest brother in Pinero's "The Thunderbolt."

But when we speak of performances of minor parts at the New Theatre, now no more, or at Mr. Ames's Little Theatre, we must bear in mind that here we are concerned with a repertoire company in which every player is supposed to be good, and in which some exceptional players will always, in the nature of things, be playing small parts. There should be no surprise in such cases. The surprising thing really is that we have so few repertoire companies, for the delight of seeing good acting, really vital and distinguished acting, in all the parts of a play, is one of the finest pleasures of the theatre. Nine-tenths of our female stars don't want any other woman acting well in their companies, and nine-tenths of the managers are glad enough not to pay for good acting when they can help it. So we, the public, suffer—and make no fuss. Mr. Ames at his Little Theatre is doing a fine work in showing us little parts finely acted, just as the New Theatre tried to. May his work bear ample fruit. There is no more excuse, artistically, for a production in which the minor rôles are poorly acted than for an orchestra in which the second violins are out of tune, and the trombones wobbly.

OPERA PROMISES for the NEW YEAR

musical phrase over and over again for a matter of four or five hours. And although the aid of the authorities was invoked, threats of violence proved of no use, and Mr. Godowsky pursued his way unmolested.

Another pianist, who is well spoken of abroad and who expects to receive an American endorsement in 1912-13, is Miss Irene Scharrer. She is barely out of her 'teens, is said to be beautiful and to possess that much to be desired attribute—personality.

Gottfried Galston, whose pianistic prowess has been exhibited to the reported satisfaction of English, French, and Russian audiences, will join the procession of foreigners who are making first professional visits to this side of the Atlantic. So, too, will Miss Germaine Schnitzer, a young woman with pianistic skill, who played here several seasons ago.

OPERA SINGERS IN CONCERT

Now come the singers. Artistically first among those not recently heard in the United States and Canada is Mr. Georg Henschel, once conductor—the first conductor—of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but now a concert soloist and teacher. Mr. Henschel's voice—a baritone—is not a marvelous instrument nor, at this day, is it likely to be at its best. As a teacher, Mr. Henschel's mastery of musical interpretation has won for him an international reputation. However, in either capacity his art is always welcome.

Leon Rains, an American basso who has had a career in the German opera houses, has planned a tour of the country in which he formerly made his home. Miss Minnie Tracy, a soprano well known to music lovers in the United States, is returning after an extended absence on the other side.

As in former years, the concert singing contingent consists chiefly in a few of the popular stars who either are of the reigning grand opera companies or formerly were. Pre-eminent among them is Mme. Schumann-Heink. Some of the others are Mmes. Gadski, Fremstad, Homer, Garden, Nordica, Gluck, and Nielsen, Miss Felice Lyne, and Messrs. Bonci, Martin, Clément, Griswold, Whitehill, Bispham, McCormack, and Harrold.

Mischa Elman is coming back. He played in Europe all last season. Efrem Zimbalist and Fritz Kreisler also return. Miss Maud Powell, the representative feminine violinist of our country, will have her share of concert work. These four, and M. Ysaye, stand materially in front of practically all their competitors of the season.

It should be a satisfactory season in all the musical branches. One cannot forecast with unerring precision, but the signs this season are certainly hopeful. If they fully materialize none will have serious fault to find. Judging by advance programs, unusual breadth characterizes the music selected for performance. It includes a representation of the musical viewpoints of the world.

PARCELLE'S POST CHOCOLATES are as pure, dainty and enticing as fresh plucked flowers. The delicately-flavored chocolate coatings melt between your teeth, revealing still richer treats—centers of choice true fruits—fruit-flavored creams—or plump choice nut meats. Only Nature's choicest fruits and goodies absolutely without preservatives, are used in our candies. The sugars, chocolates, spices, and all else are the finest the markets afford. The method of making is exactly clean. All our chocolates are fork dipped. To see them made would make you hungry for a taste. Only two concerns in the U. S. make candy to compare with ours. Their candy sells to neighborhood trade and costs $2.00 a pound.

Your store cannot sell such fresh, fine-flavored candy as this

Its fresh natural delicacy and toothsome-ness are as superior to store-sold candy as the fresh plucked rose is to the dried rose-leaf. Parcelle's Post Candy is packed fresh every day and rushed to you by Uncle Sam.

Chocolates sold in stores are made to keep. They must keep, awaiting shipment at the factory—in the middle-man's storehouse—in the dealer's showcase. They are usually many months old when you buy them. No wonder they are disappointing and lack the delicate creamy smoothness you are sure of getting in Parcelle's Post Candy. We have no middleman but Uncle Sam—no salesmen, jobbers or retailers to pay. That's why we can deliver a big box of exquisite candy to your door for $1.

We guarantee freshness and perfect delivery

We send our chocolates in our newly originated double-walled box. It's tasteful and rich, appealing to particular people. The hollow double wall defies cold, heat or dampness—keeps contents fresh and delicate. Each morsel is perfect when you take it from its dainty cup.

Choose the assortment that suits you best

In each Parcelle's Post box are four trays:

1 tray of nut chocolates, 1 tray of true fruit centers, 1 tray with fancy centers, 1 tray of chocolate creams. Usually we send the four different trays, but you can have half cream and half fancy; one-fourth nut, three-fourths fruit; or any combination you wish.

NEXT YEAR'S AUTOMOBILE

THE year 1913 might well be called a "more so year." General appearance and design are much the same as last year—only "more so." The deep, rich upholstery is deeper and richer; the long, straight lines are longer; and the number of six-cylinders, self-starters, and electric lights has increased two-fold. And this improved appearance, added luxury, and simplicity of operation have not been at the expense of the reliability of the mechanical parts. These, too, have undergone improvements and refinements that are in keeping with the rapid progress of the last few years in the art of motor car building.

For the coming season, there will be no radical changes. The motor car has reached such a state of perfection and standardization that startling innovations are no longer "sprung." In the days when the single-cylinder motor formed the only type of power plant in general use, the manufacturer of the four-cylinder engine could open the eyes of the motoring world. The manufacturer who first brought the motor from under the seat—where it had rested for several years in the generally-accepted design of automobiles—and placed it forward under the bonnet where it was easily accessible, was the pioneer in an innovation that every manufacturer in the country has been forced to follow. But this day is over, and the present season finds only refinements, modifications, the general adoption of that which has proved good, and the elimination of those features which have proved unreliable.

So far as the general appearance and body design of the 1913 car is concerned, many new refinements will be found. The long, low, straight-line effect has been emphasized, curves have given place to angles, and the outside of the body of the car has been kept "smooth" and free from projections such as handles, hinges, and the like. Tool boxes, battery boxes, gas tanks, and spare tires are now carried either under the floor boards of the car or at the rear, and the running boards are thus left free from the objectionable impedimenta of former years.

Self-starters, which were given a thorough "try-out" on forty or fifty makes of machines last year, have established themselves so firmly among the necessities of modern motor car operation that they will be found as regular equipment on fully three-fourths of the 1913 automobiles; and those makers who have not included such a device in the original purchase price of a car have arranged to furnish a reliable self-starter at from $20 to $100 additional. The same conditions prevail in regard to electric lights, but to a less extent. Practically every car provided with an electric self-starter is furnished with electric exterior and interior lights. Some of those cars using the other forms of self-starters, such as the gas, compressed air, or the mechanical, are provided with apparatus for supplying electric current to two or three of the outside lights.

FEMININE MOTOR NECESSITIES

FOR the woman who motors, nothing is more complete and luxurious of its kind than the neat little box, shown in the illustration at the bottom of the page. This contains in compact form all the accessories of the toilet that refresh or beautify. It is made of black leather lined with tan leather and closes with lock and key. There are secure compartments for every jar and bottle so that they do not rattle nor spill, and it may be easily carried by a handle.

The contents, imported from a famous French house, include a beauty cream to take away the disagreeable parched feeling which comes after hours of travel. The purpose of one excellent lotion is to wipe away the cream, and after this is done, the application of a milky substance from another bottle leaves the skin soft and velvety. There is also a wrinkle cream for massaging the corners of the eyes, which are apt to be drawn and tired after a long run, and a liquid rouge of delicate tint. A soap made from the cream of fresh milk is included, and also a powder of fine and impalpable quality, which comes in several tones. In a lower compartment are tucked away little balls of absorbent cotton, each tied with baby ribbon which makes a handle.

A soothing lotion for the eyes completes the equipment. This relieves the strain, and cleanses the eyes of particles of dust, which irritate after rushing against the wind for any length of time. Application is made easy by the use of an eye cup. Price complete, $25.

A dainty assortment of traveling belongings comprising every necessity for smartening up at the end of a motoring trip, is contained in a flexible morocco case. This is lined with moire of the same color and the attractive fittings are of fine French gilt in a new etched design of stripes. The list of conveniences includes a hair pin holder, a cologne bottle, a powder book, a convex mirror, a brush and comb, a manicure set, a powder box, scissors, and a knife. This is priced at $12.

In a most compact case are all the toilet accessories that refresh or beautify.

Clincher Cushion Tires

Fit Pneumatic Rims, Standard Clincher or Quick Detachable Clincher

TWELVE per cent more miles for every charge of your battery; the current economy of the ordinary electric pneumatic tire without the bother and expense of tire troubles.

And Resiliency, Comfort, Riding Pleasure never before approached in solid tires. We have the proofs, substantiated by test in America's leading electric car factories.

These proofs are obtained, before tire leaves our factory, by scientific tests. The tire on the wheel must measure to the standard established by exact road and load conditions. Get these proofs!

No matter how your electric is now equipped, you can quickly, easily and economically change to these Firestone Clincher Cushion tires without changing wheel or rim.

These tires are the ultimate accomplishment in solids.

The make-shifts of holes and blocked-out sections which substitute jerky spring and jolt for uniform resiliency are abandoned stages in Firestone evolution.

The over-hang design, the scientific proportioning of the Firestone Clincher Cushion, supported by the continuous body of Firestone supreme resiliency, makes level ground of car-track or other obstacles.

Dual tread, in addition to increased cushion, gives secure protection against skid or slip. One section of tire prepares dry gripping surface for second section. Get our electric tire catalog and be convinced by the facts and figures based on scientific and practical proof.

WHITE TOWN CARS

Built Particularly For Women

THE White Forty Coupe is the pioneer woman's gasoline car. To the woman who drives, it offers the touring radius and flexible speed of the gasoline roadster, combined with the comfort, safety, and ease of operation of the electric brougham.

The left-side drive admits of easy access to the driving wheel from the curb. The White Electrical Starter, positive under all conditions, not only is operated by one simple motion from the seat, but also renders impossible the inconvenience of the engine being accidentally stalled. The lighting of the car, electric throughout, is likewise controlled from the driving seat.

The first of its kind, the White Coupe is the recognition of woman's demand for a clean, safe motor carriage for town and suburban use, having the grace, speed, and radius of travel which only a gasoline car can give. White Coupes are built in Thirty, Forty, and Sixty horsepower models.

Distinction in Dress

In dress there is one of two notes to strike—individuality or a strict adherence to the fashions of the day. Both require correct figure lines and careful corset selection.

The Corset Makes the Figure

Assuming that your aim is to be corseted for either the fashions of the day or your individual taste in dress—a Redfern is your model—soft, light and pliant—yielding to every demand of the wearer.

The contour of the season's figure gives the effect of the natural waist—which simulates both the Grecian and the Oriental—with long lines and a slightly curved but closely confined hip.

The Standard of Corset Fashion

is the Redfern, exquisitely dainty and in keeping with the most fastidious dress.

There is a Redfern especially designed for every type of form, and wherever a Redfern is sold it is fitted by an expert corsetiere, who will select your particular model and adapt it to your figure.

Found at all High-class Stores.

MUSICAL EVENTS

THE Symphony Society of New York announces a series of eight Friday afternoon concerts from November 8th to March 14th, inclusive, and sixteen Sunday afternoon concerts from November 10th to March 16th. These will be given in the new Aeolian Hall, and, as usual, under the leadership of Mr. Walter Damrosch. "The Friday concerts will be devoted to programs arranged for the most advanced musical students and lovers of symphonic music," and a special feature will be explanatory lectures by Mr. Damrosch. In addition to the symphonic masterworks of the classics, some important novelties will be performed. One, "Un Tableau Symphonique Thèbes," by Fanelli is the work of a French composer who for more than fifty years has lived the traditional life of a genius in obscurity and neglect. Only last year some Fanelli manuscripts were discovered, and his works, performed abroad, met with great success. Other novel features of the programs are, "A Page from Homer," by Rimsky-Korsakoff—the St. Cecilia Club, conducted by Victor Harris, will assist at the performance of this work; Suite Infantine, "Ma Mère Oye," by Ravel, and "A Fairy Tale," by Victor Kolar, who for years was a member of this orchestra. The symphonies to be given will include Beethoven's No. 7 and 8, Brahms's No. 3 and 4, Tschaikowsky's No. 4, and Schumann's Rhenish Symphony. November 17th is the date set for a Massenet Memorial Program, at which Edmond Clément, the distinguished French tenor, will be the soloist.

The selection of Clément for the Massenet program is especially fitting, since he was the friend and pupil of the late composer, and at his recital in Aeolian Hall on January 7th he will sing for the first time a group of songs written for him by Massenet. The day following his appearance with the New York Symphony Society, Clément will begin his engagement with the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Company in a gala performance of "Mignon" with Frieda Hempel and Maggie Teyte. On November 25th he will appear at the première of the Boston Opera Company in "The Tales of Hoffman," and later will sing in "Louise," "Carmen," "Mignon," and "The Barber of Seville." Besides the above engagements, Clément will sing with the Philharmonic Orchestra in two concerts, one to be given in Carnegie Hall in January, the other in Brooklyn some time during March.

CONCERTS RECENT AND TO COME

Albert Spalding, America's foremost violinist, gave his farewell recital on November 20th at Carnegie Hall, when the following program was rendered:

Elena Gerhardt, the celebrated singer of German lieder, has returned to America for a long tour. Her opening concert, which will be one of a series of ten given in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will take place in Providence on December 31st. Miss Gerhardt will remain in America until the middle of April. Many cities not previously included in her itinerary will be visited this year, among them, Buffalo, Montreal, Cincinnati and St. Louis.

Three of the four People's Symphony Concerts are yet to come, and will be given at Carnegie Hall on the afternoons of December 15th, March 23rd, and April 20th. The assisting soloists will be Maximilian Pilzer, John Barnes Wells, and Putnam Griswold.

Louis Persinger, the American violinist, has returned for his first concert tour in America and will give a recital in Aeolian Hall on November 9th.

The Volpe Symphony Society will inaugurate its ninth season with a concert at Carnegie Hall on November 26th. Concerts to follow are scheduled for January 7th, February 18th, and March 25th. Arthur Phillips, an American baritone from the London Opera House, and Clara Butt, the well-known English contralto, will make their American debut with this orchestra.

WHAT THE PHILHARMONIC PROPOSES

The Philharmonic Society of New York, under the leadership of Joseph Stransky, will give its opening concert at Carnegie Hall on November 14th. This will be the first of a series of concerts comprising sixteen Thursday evenings, sixteen Friday evenings, and eight Sunday afternoons. An unusually long list of assisting artists is announced. The instrumentalists are Eugene Ysaye, Misha Elman, Efram Zimbalist, Henry Schmitt, Maud Powell, Louis Persinger, Bonarius Grimsen, Leo Schulz, Leopoldt Godowsky, Max Pauer, Ernest Schelling, Rudolph Ganz, Josef Lhevinne, Germaine Schnitzer, Henri Leon Le Roy, and Xavier Reiter. Among the vocal soloists are Mmes. Schumann-Heink, Alda, and Tina Lerner. John McCormack, the Irish tenor, will make his first appearance this season with the Philharmonic, and Carl Jörn has been secured for a special Beethoven-Wagner-Liszt program. Reinhold von Warlich and Edmond Clément will also appear, and for the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, which will be given during the season, the following quartette has been engaged: Florence Hinckle, Nevada Van der Veer, Reed Miller, and Frederick Weld.

Besides the New York dates, bookings of this orchestra include concerts to be given at Providence, Holyoke, Boston, New Haven, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Rochester, Syracuse, Toronto, Detroit, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh; also a tour of twelve cities in New York and the Middle West.

November 7th marked the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's New York season, which consists of two series of five concerts each, to be given on Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons. The Thursday dates are December 5th, January 9th, February 20th, March 20th; the Saturday dates are November 9th, December 7th, January 11th, February 22d, March 22d. Dr. Karl Muck, after an absence of two years, has resumed the direction of this orchestra, and, following an established custom, the exclusive services of several noted soloists have been engaged for the season. These are Mme. Matzenauer, Miss Geraldine Farrar, who will make but one appearance in concert this winter, and Fritz Kreisler.

THE PHILHARMONIC LEGACY

TEN dollars is a small sum—but a situation has arisen in which ten dollars will control the disposal of a million! The very remarkable announcement on page 8 will explain this situation.

This appeal has appeared previously in Vogue in the issue of May 15th, 1912. It received a hearty and generous response at that time, and is now repeated by The Philharmonic Society of New York for the benefit of those readers who may have overlooked it. It is not necessary to live in New York to avail yourself of this invitation to become a member of the Philharmonic Society, and to help the Society secure its legacy. Read page 8.

REDUCTIO AD ABSURDUM

And the great trouble is that no other woman takes her experience as a warning, so if the fasting fad keeps on, it will not need a nation of experts to tell us how to reduce the cost of living. The women who want to be thin will see to that. Leave it to them. Apples and dates and barley may go up in price as soon as they form a fashionable diet, but any man can provide for any wife when she requires only one of each a day. He won't save money, of course, for the cost of a specialist is greater than the cost of living.

All over this land of plenty, women who are trying the apple and barley, or the tea and toast, or the rice and date diet, are proudly exclaiming at every luncheon table, "I've lost ten pounds, my dear. See how loose my frock is." Yes, and they have lost their nerves and their smooth skin, and the life force. Their figures may look girlish, but their faces look haggish.

Then there is the piper who flutes a call to roll. Well, there's no harm in rolling, but, isn't it foolish? Think of a sensible woman getting down on the floor and rolling like a ship in a beam sea when she could take a five-mile walk in the country and get the same result. But walking doesn't appeal, don't you see? There's nothing new about it; no one could get a hearing who advocated walking. But to roll—well, there's a new thought. You bruise your knees and elbows, tangle your hair, lose your breath, and feel as sore as though you had ridden a hamstrung nag on a corduroy road, but you arise with a feeling of virtue.

Now these are only the cardinal ways of making a fool of yourself by reducing. There are many others. There is the banting system, the systems of taking three hot baths a day, doing the turkey trot for an hour morning and night, taking electric baths, pouring mineral salts into the blood, and drinking sour milk, for that Bulgarian bacillus is still a busy little germ.

Women are trying these singly, or playing various combinations which they hope will win in a swoop. If they fail, then they listen to a more dangerous piping than any of these, and take thyroid extracts which may reduce a few more vital things than flesh. And all in the name of fashion!

The designers of modern clothes are either a cause or an effect of all this. They claim to be the latter. But whose-soever the fault, women want to look like planked shads in the new costumes, and they go to any lengths to do it. It is an entrancing sight to the carping critic who likes nature's curves in moderation, to see the woeful face of the woman who finds that she is too thin to wear her thousand dollars' worth of new winter gowns. However, the next day she gleefully announces to her envious circle that she has sent them back to the dressmaker to have them hung on smaller linings.

And what next? What pipes the new piper in need of ducats? This: to continue the one apple a day diet, sleep only five hours, roll or turkey trot night and morning, and then, here's the new idea—just before retiring, lie under the porte cochère for fifteen minutes and have the chauffeur guide a small automobile with extra inflated tires lengthwise over the body.

THE SILENT Waverley Electric

An Ornament To Every Social Occasion

The New Four Passenger Full View Ahead

Waverley Limousine-Four

Here is a four-passenger electric so novel in design and elegant in finish and appointment that it graces every social occasion, however elaborate.

That has four separate Pullman chairs, delightfully spacious and luxurious, instead of the usual forward and backward seats.

Seat Plan
Patents Pending

Three of these chairs face forward, the fourth is a "cozy corner" in front at the right.

Thus accommodating four grown people comfortably, without any crowding or crushing of handsome gowns and wraps and without obstructing the driver's view—who sits, as usual, in the left-hand rear seat, the pleasant and sociable position when driving alone or with one other person.

If you are carrying golf clubs or have some parcels or any other impedimenta, there is ample space to stow them away behind the two side chairs, completely out of the way, as shown by the crosses in the little seating diagram.

Waverley drop sill construction permits of a graceful, perfectly balanced body swung on full elliptic springs—the only springs which insure joltless, easy riding.

Control is so safe and so simple that it is only the movement of a hand on the lever.

More mileage than any day requires and more speed than you can use in city driving. Can go anywhere a gas car goes, is a splendid hill climber and always ready for steady service even in the wildest blizzard.

40 cells 11 plate Exide

Hycap or Philadelphia M. V. Style or 13 plate Gould or Waverley M. V. Style batteries. Edison or Ironclad Exide extra.

A COMFORTABLE GUEST ROOM

The Most Practical Evidence of Hospitality Is Comfort and Convenience in the Furnishings of the Guest Room

MANY a guest room is open to criticism for the air of affectation which its furnishings suggest. It is often too markedly "the best room," and its magnificence, often out of all proportion to the furnishing of the rest of the house, so discomfits the guest that he never feels at ease within its confines.

Furniture stores often call attention to certain "special sets for the guest room" that follow erratic styles intended to catch the fancy of the unwary. These sets are usually of imitation mahogany or of bird's eye maple, and though the prospective customer would not consider them for a moment for her own room, yet she is often easily lured to purchase them for the refined torture of her guests. Needless to say special "best sets" are to be avoided, as is anything in the way of decoration that suggests a pose.

A COMFORTABLE BED

There is nothing the visitor will so thoroughly appreciate, however full of sentiment he may be, as a good mattress and a comfortable bed; it is on these that most thought and money should be expended. If there is to be any economy it should be in the frame of the bed and not in its fittings. There is much choice among woods and metals for the bed, but from the viewpoint of sanitation, brass ones are to be preferred. If there is only one guest room it is wiser to have two single beds than one large bedstead, so that two guests may be accommodated. The room should not be fitted out too daintily, for even if the woman visitor is ecstatic over its prettiness, the man guest is sure to remain unmoved and unappreciative.

Besides the bed, this room should contain two or three easy chairs, a rocking chair, a slipper chair or bench, a bureau or dressing table, a chiffonier, a long mirror, a lounge, a night stand, and a trunk stand. A folding screen is sometimes useful and should be included if space will permit. A set for the dressing table should also be provided in case any articles have been omitted in packing. This need not be of silver; it is even, perhaps, in better taste to have one of a less unostentatious material. Either a substantial table or a writing desk with all conveniences should be provided.

NECESSARY FURNISHINGS

It is very important to have lights near the head of the bed, and a switch within arm's reach. Many people read in bed and so find such an arrangement of lights almost a necessity. The newspapers and a few books and magazines should also be provided. There is hardly enough space in the average guest room for many books and it is only a lucky chance when the visitor will care to read any of the books provided; so big bookcases can be omitted.

Different personal needs must be studied if the room is to be successful, but if the furniture is comfortable, the room sunny, and the color scheme harmonious, then half the battle is won. Ornaments should be used sparingly. One or two carefully chosen pictures are sufficient decoration. A copy of a landscape by Corot or Daubigny is generally pleasing, as is also one of Mauve's delightfully restful pictures of Holland. Portraits are rather out of place in the bedroom, and particularly in the guest room, for the features of one's ancestors are apt to seem a bit intrusive in the privacy and tranquillity of the boudoir.

Many people make museums of their spare bedrooms by furnishing them with various "finds" from antique shops. Valued old furniture is protected in this way from wear and tear, without being altogether in disuse. But the real question to be considered is the comfort of the guest. One quickly sees that a room treated in such a way must prove decoratively unsatisfactory and so unfit for the visitor.

Really the ideal arrangement is to provide the visitor with two rooms. A sleeping room and a dressing room; with the latter, of course, should be connected a private bath.

So much of the pleasure of a visit depends upon household arrangements that too much care can hardly be expended upon the guest room.

Social, Ethical, and Educational Training Is the Broad Ideal of the East Side Settlement House

THE East Side Settlement House is to be congratulated upon its site, with its delightful view of the East River giving a constant panorama of river craft and the activities of the docks. Inside, the commodious, tastefully arranged rooms constitute a welcome change from the cramped surroundings of the tenement dwellers for whom the East Side House is maintained.

The work of this settlement as outlined by the head worker, Miss Trenholm, is broad and varied in character. The aim is to establish not only a neighborhood house to give advice and assistance, but a social center as well, where strangers and aliens of both sexes may come and create for themselves a place in the social life of the community. Trained representatives are sent out by the House to investigate the condition of the families under its care. These workers go to the assistance of those who are ill and who need to go to hospitals, they arrange for those who should be in charitable institutions, and on request of teachers, even visit the parents of their pupils with the object of bringing school and home into the proper relation. Nine hundred families, known as the Yorkville Community, are included in this comprehensive work.

THE DAY NURSERY

Women, as distinguished from girls, are helped in several ways. There is a woman's club which meets on Thursday evenings, and a nursery mother's club which assembles on Friday evenings. Women as well as girls are allowed the use of the gymnasium, but perhaps the greatest service to the women is the day nursery where the mother bread-winner may leave her little ones for the day.

The arrangements for the children's comfort are excellent. A room filled with cribs is devoted to the infants. Here they have every care that an intelligent mother would bestow. When the weather permits, the babies are placed in fitted baskets and set out on an awning balcony. This is an admirable way of making them truly fresh-air babies, for the house has plenty of open space around it on the land side as well as on the river side, and the air is purer than most city dwellers breathe.

THE KINDERGARTEN

The children who can walk have plenty of opportunities to play, and if they are old enough they are sent to one of the kindergarten classes. The very young ones are fed, and after their meals, are put to sleep in a row of couch-like beds. Although the settlement officers use every means at their disposal to enable the mothers of their district to keep their children at home, it was found necessary last year to care for 6,665 babies and 20,000 kindergarten children. It is by arrangement with the New York Kindergarten Association that these classes are held in the settlement.

About a year ago the settlement was so fortunate as to secure, through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Read, a fine summer home in Stepney, Connecticut. This consists of seventy acres with a farmhouse and out buildings. Here many children are sent on holidays. This care, given the children naturally much interests the mothers in the work being done and so it is not difficult to gather them together for mothers' meetings.

ENJOYMENT FOR ALL AGES

The number of places in the building set aside as club rooms and assembly halls shows what generous opportunities there are for all ages in the community to meet and become acquainted. That the opportunities are appreciated is attested by the fact that thirty-six different clubs hold their meetings at the settlement. The leaders of these clubs form the council or governing board which makes and enforces the laws of the clubs.

To encourage education among its charges, the East Side House provides classes in music, carpentry, cooking, and even one for little housekeepers. The recreations include gymnasium work, games, dances, motion pictures on certain evenings, and Board of Education lectures weekly during the season. Besides this, the national holidays are appropriately observed.

PATRONS

Many other kinds of assistance are rendered by this well equipped institution. One very important division of the work is the investigation of the family budget. Through the Domestic Relations Court the House secures weekly payments from a defaulting or absconding husband, and out of a special fund it pays working mothers the amount of the day's wages to care for children ill enough to warrant hospital care.

Much of the efficiency of the administration of this important enterprise is due to the devotion and trained intelligence of the head worker, Miss Trenholm. The other officers of the settlement are: Mr. James S. Cushing, President; Mr. H. B. Dominick, Vice-president. Among those interested in the management are: Mr. Francis Lynde Stetson, Mr. Everett P. Wheeler, Mrs. Daniel S. Lamont, Mr. Evert Jansen Wendell, Mr. Francis S. Smithers, Mr. Charles E. Lydecker.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN CRITIC

Since Without an Audience There is No Play, It is Self Evident that the Audience, Not the Play, is the Thing

THE drama is the only one of the arts that requires, for its complete expression, three collaborators—author, actor, audience. All other arts exist independent of any but the genius who creates. Great pictures may be painted, great music may be composed without a public, but no play can be produced without an audience, and the play that is not written to be given upon a stage before an audience is not a play.

"Until the audience is present, there is no play," is a truism of the theatre. Playwrights and actors who succeed always recognize this, and there is a growing consciousness in the public that it is a co-worker, and can be held responsible for what happens in the theatre.

And fortunately drama is easier for the layman to understand than other arts, partly because of its bigger and broader methods. Everyone can get a certain knowledge, not very profound or scholarly, perhaps, but sufficient to appreciate and enjoy the play.

WHEN IS A PLAY WORTH SEEING?

Having established the fact of this inter-relation between play and audience, we can no longer shift the entire blame for the kind of plays produced upon the shoulders of either dramatist or manager. It is important that we equip ourselves for intelligent play-going. To know what we like is not sufficient unless we know why we like it, and unless the reason for our liking is based upon at least a rudimentary knowledge of what goes to make a play.

A group of women in the middle west who have met together each week through a period of several years to read and discuss plays, was asked, "What makes a play worth seeing?" Here are some of the verbatim answers.

"Any play which gives me a new grip upon the vital facts of life, and a broader sympathy with mankind, whether its method be that of the serious play, or the thrust and parry of satire, or even the broadside of farce, is worth while to me. If the play, in addition to this, is true to its type, if the structure is balanced, the characters vitally studied, and the lines brilliant and polished, then such a play becomes a work of art and a distinct gift to mankind."

Another answered, "What you bring away with you and think about afterwards with interest and pleasure."

Others said, "The something vital and alive that you remember the next day and the day after." "The play that reveals something to you, the play that holds your thoughts."

Let us analyze these unpremeditated statements of what makes a play worth while. The first great demand is for truth, and in order to get truth in the play we must have sincerity in the author. Even the casual playgoer has outgrown the ultra-romantic play that presents a rose-tinted life, unreal and sentimental. We do not enjoy, quite so much as formerly, our good cry in the theatre, perhaps because fashion decrees that weeping in public is out of date, but even more for another reason—we would rather laugh, or even think a bit. The day of the "Two Orphans" and "East Lynne" has passed. Some even ask for the straight truth and the whole truth.

WHAT MAKES A GOOD PLAY?

Next to the sincerity of the playwright comes the interest of his material. We have a right to demand entertainment in the theatre; the author must see to it that he interests us, either by his choice of theme or by his exposition of it. Some, even many there are, who will say that this requirement cuts out the problem play, and perhaps the thesis play. When the subject is straightforwardly handled and the people of the play are human beings, not stage puppets—then if such plays depress us and do not cause us to react to the truth in a wholesome and stimulating way, it is because of some lack in us. Either we do not understand, and in this case we have no right to our ignorance, or we are not interested in our fellow beings, and in this case we have no right to our unsympathy.

Logic we must have in the play that is to engage our attention and hold it until the drop of the curtain. The characters that we meet in the first act must develop as would such men and women placed in their environment and circumstances beyond the proscenium arch. They cannot pass through the days or years of the play in some fanciful, picturesque way as though walking in a dream land. Characters must so reveal themselves in the limited time of their action on the stage that we have a clear-cut and definite understanding of them, as if they were people of our everyday contact. If the play does not accomplish this, its values are vitiated; for if the characters are not real, there can be no logical sequence in the action. Good characterization may do even more: it may enlarge our experience and allow us to see the mixed motives that underlie actions otherwise incomprehensible.

"When Bunty Pulls the Strings" is an excellent illustration of clever character sketching that amuses and charms, and at the same time, with gentle satire, holds up the mirror to our foibles and frailties. We enjoy "Bunty" all the more because it does not strike at us directly, but by way of Scotland.

A SPECTACLE AND A PLAY

The extravaganzas and superbas of old seem to have achieved a popular revival in the gorgeous spectacle of many of the recent plays such as "The Daughter of Heaven." We have no quarrel with pageantry in the theatre, and if we have not traveled too far from our childhood, we can still enjoy the play overlaid with scenic trappings; but we must not confuse such plays with real drama. We must try not to let ourselves be swept off our feet by mere costly settings. Scenery that wins applause for itself is to be distrusted in the theatre, like dust raised by a politician in one quarter to conceal dishonesty in another. Such scenery is calculated to divert attention from the play, and more than likely has been used for this explicit purpose to cover up the thinness of the subject matter. Scenery should help forward the action of the play, should indicate the passing of time, or interpret the characters. Environment may suggest personality, as in the sea captain's room in "Paid in Full." Such furnishings and appurtenances may be made to collaborate with the dramatist in depicting character, so that the protagonists need not be explained in undramatic conversation by the minor characters. Scenery that becomes a part of the play in one or more of these ways fulfils its highest use and serves its own best purpose.

CAN A PLAY BE TRANSPLANTED?

Most plays fall naturally into classes and are labeled according to type, and indiscriminate mixing of these various types of plays is impossible without loss. It is safer to keep the play true to its type. When comedy mingles with farce the result is dire. When the social or problem play becomes sentimental or melodramatic, there is disaster ahead. Only the cleverest and most practised technician understands the proper blending.

Difficult to classify is the play of special appeal, the play that is written around the theme of timely, if ephemeral, interest. The new thought of "The Witching Hour," the graft and bulldozing in ward politics of "The Boss," the hypnotism and dual personality of "The Case of Becky" are subjects of the hour worth presenting dramatically, but are not usually enduring; public interest must in time shift from them. The social and economic plays may also suffer a decline when the problems they present have been solved and industrial justice has been established. If the public will inform itself about plays and demand the best, the dramatist will keep to type.

The transplanted play is the most difficult and elusive of all to judge. It takes, for example, a situation essentially Viennese and adapts it to an American locale into which it fits as a round peg in a square hole. Then some, who are of the theatre, and others who are not of the theatre, wonder why any American audience sees anything impossible or unnatural in material that has been twisted and pulled out of shape until it is neither Viennese nor American. The French play when it is made over to end happily and is otherwise distorted until it is neither French nor American nor anything resembling a good play, seldom retains any of its original power. Are we as a people so illogical, so constantly in pursuit of vacuous amusement, that we demand happy-ending plays which are not honest, but have been made, not inspired, to rejoice the juvenile mind of the matinee maid, or to rest the over-tired man of business?

Even the good, substantial English plays that we should surely understand without adaptation suffer from the transfer of their scenes, supposedly to enhance their interest for a provincial rather than a cosmopolitan public. Of even more flagrant affront is the play to which an act has been added in order to satisfy the audience that demands its money's worth in length.

EDUCATING A CRITICAL PUBLIC

To meet the needs of a public of intelligent playgoers, the Drama League of America was formed to encourage good plays by locating and organizing audiences for their appreciation and support. In spite of the attempt to brand it as such, it has managed to escape the "high brow" stigma.

The conscious intention has been to gather a committee of men and women as different as possible from one another in equipment and point of view. The consensus of opinion of a committee so formed furnishes a pretty fair judgment of a play. To satisfy a committee made up in this way, a play, to be commended, need not be flawless nor great, but it must satisfy the intelligence of the committee as a whole. The bulletins published by the Play-ground Committee, of which the writer is the chairman, are based upon the fact that the committee is willing to take the responsibility of recommending, at times even urging, the public, to see the plays that it bulletins.

Plays are too often rushed on the stage without sufficient pruning on the part of the dramatist, and without adequate rehearsals and familiarity with the lines on the part of the actors. When this happens, a play must stand on its merits as presented at the opening of the engagement. Unlike the newspaper critic, the League's committee cannot, if it would, go again to the theatre and issue a bulletin after the play has been whipped into shape.

A prominent dramatic critic said recently that young people choose their plays with less thought and care than they choose their drinks at a soda fountain. If this is true, there is a place for such an organization as the Drama League which seeks to gather an audience that knows and appreciates drama as an art.

If the public is fostering plays that counterfeit life, or that are commonplace and vulgar, or that pander to the sensual, or to sickening sentimentality, then there is need of such an organization as this to restore drama to its high estate among the arts.

COMES a NEW MODE in JEWELRY

stones. A beautiful Cartier bracelet nearly an inch and a half in width is made of alternating rows of square cut diamonds and emeralds running in parallel lines from the top to the lower edge.

Last summer at Deauville was launched the fashion of wearing bracelets above the elbow, a fancy which apparently is gaining ground as both Cécile Sorel of the Comédie Française and Polaire have adopted it. With the present style of practically sleeveless evening gowns, this is an attractive manner of breaking the long line of the bare arm. A bracelet worn by Polaire is even wider than that from Cartier, and is made in the same parallel design of alternating rows of diamonds and sapphires.

THE WATCH BRACELET BECOMES AN ORNAMENT

The bracelet watch is more than ever in use, and designs are constantly becoming more rich and varied. This article, which was originally intended for utility solely, has been developed by the French into an ornament of great artistic value. There are many different forms of these watches—round, oblong, square, or diamond shaped, and they are made of platinum, gold, or silver and set in heavy frames of precious stones slipped over or used as a clasp for straps of velvet, moire, leather, suède, or gold or platinum links. An exceedingly handsome one was made on a diamond bracelet consisting of two rows of the stones which, in front, widened into four rows forming the support for the small, round watch which was set in a massive diamond frame.

RINGS AND EARRINGS

Though in the large ornaments of pendant, collar and plaque, small stones are now used, in rings the preference is for large gems.

The revival of the marquise shape calls for stones of size and brilliancy mounted in intricate settings of small diamonds. Notwithstanding superstition, opals are greatly in demand, and many exquisite settings are designed for them. Approved forms are the broad oval or a single, round stone set deep in a circle of diamonds; the latter is especially pretty when used as setting for a solitaire. There is also a continued demand for two or three stones of equal size placed one above the other at right angles to the ring.

Earrings are but little worn in Paris. Mlle. Dorziat at the spring races wore a pair of the long, pendent variety, but whether the fashion will be revived is yet to be seen. Few of the large jewelry establishments, however, carry them in stock, and those models which they have are exceedingly long and fantastic.

JEWEL NOVELTIES

Nothing has yet been found to take the place of the chain bags of gold and silver which are still regarded with undiminished favor. The lower right illustration on page 60 shows a Vever model of heavy gold links, with a rounded clasp enameled in shades of deep, dull green and ornamented with leaves of aquamarine outlined with diamonds. Many bags are made of platinum links, covered with diamond-shaped figures of brilliants, or with tiny solitaires, and the use of different colored golds in stripes or checks is still popular.

An odd little coin purse made in the form of a swan is shown at the bottom of this page. The neck of the swan is made of heavy repoussé silver banded with small, sunken diamonds; the body is of silver links flecked with brilliants. A wide, silver bar carved to imitate feathers and following the curved line of the back, holds the purse in shape, and also forms the opening. Heavy claws of silver inset with diamonds are placed low at each side in the silver link body, and a small loop of diamonds is attached to the head at the back, so that the purse may be hung to a chain worn round the neck. This odd little purse is also made in gold links of smaller size.

Since almost the only ornament worn in the hair this season is the comb which both holds and conceals the long, twisted ends of the back hair, it is but natural that the design for combs should gain in richness and elegance. The illustration at the bottom of page 60 shows one of the beautiful styles shown this fall. The comb itself is of light-colored horn, and the top is a diamond butterfly with broad wings slightly raised as though poised for instant flight.

Attractive hatpins are made of plain crystal disks with a large diamond or a semi-precious stone, such as the lapis lazuli, placed at the point of attachment to the pin. As a rule these pins are in the form of circular plaques with slightly indented edges divided into four parts to resemble four-leafed clovers.

Have Your Jewelry Reset in Gattle Designs

THE engagement ring of a well-known Western society belle was recently made in the Gattle work-rooms.

The ring consisted of a magnificent solitaire diamond set in a platinum coronet, showing other very small diamonds.

When the ring was first exhibited it was greatly admired by the young lady's aunt, who carefully compared it with her own solitaire, and then exclaimed: "Why, it isn't any larger than mine, but—it looks larger."

This was due to the Gattle setting.

The Gattle ring was a beautiful design—especially made.

As a result, the aunt had her own ring reset, to her very great satisfaction.

Of course, the less you have to invest in jewelry, the more important it is to make your money go as far as possible. This is why "Gattle Designs" are so important. They show the stones to magnificent advantage. Get Gattle-Set Jewelry and you will always be pleased and satisfied.

Delight always attends wearing Gattle Jewelry.

Many of our fashionable and beautiful designs are used in remounting old jewelry.

Scarce a day comes that does not bring to us—personally or by letter—a request from some leader of fashion for estimates upon having jewelry reset in "Gattle Designs."

"Gattle Designs" are famous the world over. Signor Caruso—who knows all the great jewelers of the world—came to the Gattle Studios for his famous Rigoletto ring.

We deal only with jewelry—import our own gems—design our own mountings—and, in our workshops, make up the exquisite Gattle-Set Jewelry.

We handle no silverware, bronzes or bric-a-brac—only Gattle Jewelry.

This is why we can do as well for you as any concern on small pieces and, on large pieces, our work—and prices—are beyond compare.

Our display rooms on Fifth Avenue, at Thirty-Eighth Street, offer some of the rarest sights in New York City.

Come, see the beautiful Gattle Jewelry always on exhibit.

You will be most welcome and our courteous employees will be glad to show you about.

If you live at a distance—and wish to know at once about having jewelry reset—write to us. Describe the jewelry you have for resetting and tell us your present preference—whether for a ring, pendant, bracelet, brooch or what. We will reply promptly to your inquiry, telling you what we would recommend and stating our estimate of cost. (Actual charges are almost invariably less than our estimates. We figure liberally to prevent our charges being over what we quote.)

After getting our figures, you can decide whether to have us reset your jewelry.

Resetting you desire for the holidays cannot be ordered too soon.

You should write us at once for any estimates on jewelry for Christmas. Address your letter—

The BATHROOM de LUXE

CHARACTER is given to the bathroom by the quality of its furnishings; wherefore greatest care should be taken to obtain the most exquisite appointments. To meet this demand for extreme fineness, bathroom accessories have been refined to the class of luxuries rather than necessities. Bathmats are of the finest quality. One new bath-mat is especially handsome; it is of the heaviest quality, easily washable, and has the monogram of the owner placed in the center. Sometimes the monogram is varied by woven initials; prices range about $5.

LUXURIOUS TOWELS

This season's towels are more elaborate than ever before. The group of three towels illustrated on page 106 shows one in a bow-knot design for $12. The two in Wickel Arbeit embroidery shown on this page cost $7.75 each. The Wickel Arbeit looks like filet work and is now much used. In every luxuriously appointed house, when the bath is prepared, bath sheets such as the one shown on page 106 drape the entire chair; so as to give a soft, dry place to sit while rubbing off; and near by a small table holds a huge bowl of dusting or bath powder, one variety of which is shown at the top of this page. Price, $2.40. Large linen, not the usual cotton, bath towels are $30 a dozen or $2.50 each, while linen bath sheets to match sell for $10 each. The cotton bath sheet shown on page 106 costs $5.75. Much simpler, but also effective, is the guest-towel illustrated on this page; this is of striped huck with embroidered scallop finish, and may be had at the rate of $15 a dozen. Imported cotton bath towels like those shown are $18 a dozen. Bath towels and wash-cloths to match are among the novelties; the latter cost 25 cents each, and the former range in price from $2 to $5. These are sometimes in stripes of color and white.

POWDERS AND SALTS

The use of bath powders and salts has now become universal here, as in England and France, and a very large variety of these refreshing preparations is offered for choice. Many prefer the expensive English bath crystals which are full of aromatic fragrance and delightfully soften the hardest water (upper left corner of this page). Others like best the crystalized powder which comes delicately perfumed with crab-apple, lavender, (Continued on page 106) violet, or rose. This preparation is put up in small boxes at 25 cents each, and in a larger size at 85 cents. The illustration on the upper right of page 104 shows a bottle of pale pink talcum which is a distinct novelty. It is a richly fragrant, delicious rose perfume. The top of the bottle is of French gilt, and from its many little apertures the velvet-soft mixture falls in a luxurious shower.

Then there are medicinal bath crystals breathing the spicy scent of the pines. These are extremely beneficial in cases of exhaustion, as they soothe the nerves and lull the whole body. A bath crystal made by the same clever specialist as these pine-scented ones is simply perfumed and costs 50 cents for a twelve-ounce bottle.

A heavily perfumed bath powder of unusual excellence, illustrated at the top of this page is named for a famous French court beauty. A very little of this powder softens the water and drenches the skin with delicious fragrance. The price is $1 a box; $5.50 is asked for tins of extra large size, and this will be found to be the more economical way of buying this powder.

Unsurpassed for refreshing quality is an American toilet water made from the lemon verbena, which gives forth a pungent freshness agreeable for men as well as for women. Many find this a pleasant substitute for bath salts, and the price asked, 75 cents, is no higher than that of good toilet water.

Although the old-fashioned Castile soap answers perfectly for ordinary bathing purposes, two excellent brands of which can be recommended, the delightful little cakes of French soap appeal strongly to the woman who loves daintily scented accessories. The French violet and heliotrope odors of one especial make are most attractive, but an American make which has been received with favor is their rival in both quality and fragrance. A box is illustrated on page 104. The price of the latter is 25 cents for a cake which is violet in color and scent and makes a creamy lather, slightly tinged with color.

A very little of this powder softens the water and drenches the skin with delicious fragrance

THE LUXURIOUS BATH

The extravagant woman who omits no means, even the least practical, to preserve her beauty, will doubtless be interested in the famous strawberry beauty bath which tradition tells us was indulged in daily by Lucrezia Borgia, noted both for her loveliness and extravagance. This is the recipe:

Hull, but do not wash, ten quarts of ripe strawberries and put them in a large double boiler, without any water in the receptacle. Cover and let simmer gently for three hours. Watch carefully and when all of the juice has been extracted, take off the fire. Strain the strawberries through a perfectly clean cheese cloth bag. Let the strained juice stand until cold. Add one teaspoonful of pure alcohol to each quart of juice. Put into bottles and seal. When it is to be used add enough to the bath water to make it a pale pink. This famous bath was not indulged in, we may be sure, merely to satisfy the beauty's taste for a pale pink bathing fluid, but because it is delightfully tonic and a whitener of the skin.

The PAST and the FUTURE of the VARIETY-SHOW

In French, vaudeville originally designated a kind of topical song, bristling with pointed jibes at the follies of the moment; and then in time it took on another meaning when it was used to describe a light and lively farce interspersed with occasional lyrics set to old-fashioned tunes.

It is impossible to say just how and why this French word, which had two distinct meanings in its own language, should have been imported into English to characterize improperly a form of amusement which we had long known by the admirably exact name of variety-show. The French themselves call their own type of variety-show at which refreshments are served, a café concert. Their nickname for it is a "beuglant," a place where there is howling—which seems to imply that they do not expect too much melody from the singers who appear at these performances. In England an establishment of this kind is called a music-hall; and it was more than half a century ago that Planché described their blatant lyrics set to brazen tunes as "most music-hall, most melancholy."

SONG, DANCE, AND SONG-AND-DANCE

Whatever its name may be in the different parts of the world, the entertainment is much the same. The most frequent item on the program is the comic song, often accompanied by a rudimentary dance. Sometimes it is in the martial staccato of Paulus's "En revenant de la revue," which boosted General Boulanger into a furious but fleeting political popularity. Sometimes it is a coonful melody, or an almost epileptic lyric. Sometimes a singer of a more delicate art, like Yvette Guilbert, ventures upon songs of a more subtly sentimental appeal. There may be a swift succession of solos, male singers and female alternating, those of the most fame appearing latest, as is the practise in the first part of the Parisian open-air café-chantant, the "Alcazar," or the "Ambassadeurs." There may be duets or trios or quartets, serious or comic, decorously unadorned or diversified by dancing. There may be songs to be interpreted by half a dozen performers accompanied by more or less dramatic action, like the "Mulligan Guards," which was the simple germ wherefrom sprouted the long series of more and more elaborate Harrigan and Hart plays, delineating with keen insight and with sympathetic humor the manifold aspects of tenement-house life in New York, and possessing a rich flavor of fun curiously akin to that which amuses us in the plays wherein Plautus has sketched the tenement-house life in Rome two thousand years ago.

While the song and the song-and-dance and the song and parade may be the staple of the entertainment, the variety-show justifies its name by the medley of other exhibitions it presents. It delights in the dance unaccompanied by the song; and in some of the English music-halls, the Alhambra and the Empire in London, the ballet is the foremost attraction, providing an opportunity for so exquisite a ballerina as Mlle. Genée to display her dainty art. It is now a refuge for the waifs and strays of vanishing negro-minstrelsy. It is ready to welcome the wandering conjurer and the strolling juggler. It extends its hospitality to the acrobat, single or in groups, throwing flip-flaps on the stage, flying through the air on a trapeze or diving into the water in a tank. It acts as host to the trainer of performing animals, dogs and cats, seals and elephants. It lends its stage to the puppet-show performer, to the sidewalk conversationalist and to the ventriloquist with his pair of stolid figures seemingly seated uncomfortably on his knees and actually supported by his hands, while his adroit fingers manipulate their mechanical mouths.

Almost all the performers of the variety stage are presenting feats of a kind known to our remote ancestors, even if these feats are now more skillfully presented. The sidewalk conversationalist employs the same method of cut-and-thrust repartee which was utilized by the quack doctor and his jack-pudding two or three centuries ago in France, and which has since served the ring-master and the clown in the circus, the interlocutor and the end-man in negro-minstrelsy. Animals were put through their paces hundreds of years ago; and performing dogs and educated bears figure frequently in the illuminations which decorate many a medieval manuscript. There were tightrope dancers in Alexandria and in Byzantium; there were contortionists in Rome and in Greece; and the flexibility of these latter is preserved for us in the vase-paintings which have been replevined from the ashes of Pompeii and the lava of Herculaneum. Quintillian tells us of the wonderful feats of certain performers on the stage in his day "with balls, and of other jugglers whose dexterity is such that one might suppose the things which they throw from them to return of their own accord and to fly wheresoever they are commanded." The art of modern magic has enlarged its boundaries by the aid of the modern sciences of mechanics and physics, but elementary sleights of hand were known to a remote antiquity; and savages always had their medicine-men and their marabouts, workers of primitive wonders, to strike awe into the souls of their unsophisticated beholders. The variety-show may have the variety it vaunts itself as possessing, but to novelty it can lay no claim.

THE SEED OF GREAT THINGS

The constituent elements of the variety-show as we know it to-day have existed since a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary—to use the old legal phrase. And the appeal of almost every one of these elements and of the variety-show as a whole is ever to the eye and to the ear, to the senses rather than to the emotions. To the intellect it appeals even more infrequently. Its primary purpose is to afford a kaleidoscopic succession of contrasted amusements for the benefit of those who are easily satisfied by the mere glitter of spectacle, by incessant movement and by violent music.

Even in the variety-show, however, we can now and again discover signs of a longing for something less void of purpose than mere spectacle. For example, it was in a variety-show that Holden's Marionettes represented Salome performing the dance of the seven veils, the recollection of which must be cherished by all who had the felicity of beholding it. Again it was in a variety-show that Mr. Belasco's finely imaginative dramatization of Mr. Long's "Madame Butterfly" was set before the American public several years prior to its being adorned by the pathetic music of Puccini for the benefit of opera-goers.

In fact, it is well to remember that the opéra comique of the French had its humble origin in the theatre of the Parisian fair, where also we can discover the rude beginnings of that crude form of melodrama which Victor Hugo lifted into literature in "Hernani" and "Ruy Blas," casting the cloth-of-gold of his splendid lyricism over the arbitrarily articulated skeleton of his violent action. It was an old negro-minstrel act, representing the rehearsal of an amateur band that the Hanlon-Lees borrowed to amplify into a rough-and-tumble pantomime for performance in a variety-show in Paris; and this knock-about sketch proved to be the stepping-stone which enabled them soon to achieve the fantastic eccentricity of their "Voyage en Suisse," performed in real theatres, first in Paris and then in New York. And, once again, it was in a variety-show of the lowest class that Denman Thompson first appeared as "Josh Whitcomb Among the Female Bathers," a vulgar episode of indelicate humor, wherein, however, was contained the germ of that perennially popular play, the "Old Homestead," which gave a pure pleasure to countless thousands of theatre-goers season after season for at least a quarter of a century.

COQUELIN AT A VARIETY-SHOW

When we look back over the long annals of the variety-show, we cannot escape the conclusion that here is its real opportunity, its true function, and its necessary justification. For the most part it supplies a purely sensational amusement for the unthinking, and yet it is continually serving as a nursery for the actual theatre. It is thus seen to be a proving ground for the seeds of widely different dramatic species—opéra comique and melodrama in France, the ballet d'action in England, the rural play in the United States. It is not always conscious of its possibilities, nor does it always improve them to best advantage. Normally it provides an entertainment appealing mainly to the senses, often empty, and often unsatisfying, because of its monotony. But on occasion it is capable of grasping at higher things and of encouraging artists who will sooner or later outgrow its limitations and transfer their activities to the theatres wherein audiences are eager for veracity of character-portrayal.

On one side the variety-show intersects the ring of the circus and the curving line of the First Part of negro-minstrelsy, while on the other it impinges on the sphere of the more literary drama. Its existence is evidence that the show-business is always the show-business, no matter how manifold and dissimilar its manifestations may seem to be. The men and women who have grown up in the regular theatres are a little inclined to be scornfully jealous of the less highly esteemed performers in the variety-show, even if they themselves are occasionally tempted by the lure of high pay for hard work to condescend to vaudeville engagements. No doubt the bill of fare set before us more often than not in the variety-show justifies this attitude on the part of the high priests of the more legitimate drama; yet they ought to be broad-minded enough to recognize merit wherever it may be found.

The late John Gilbert, best of Sir Peter Teazles and of Sir Anthony Absolutes, was not a little provoked by the praise bestowed upon Harrigan and Hart and their associates by Mr. Howells and by other critics of the acted drama, who relished the peculiar flavor of "Squatter Sovereignty" and its companion plays. Gilbert was puzzled to discover any reason why any criticism should be wasted on pieces which pretended to be little more than variety-show sketches. But when Coquelin, a far more versatile comedian than Gilbert, was taken by a New York friend to see one of the Harrigan pieces he was intensely interested in the skill with which the different types of tenement-house character were represented by the clever members of Harrigan's admirably balanced company; and the great French actor, who had impersonated all of the parts Molière had composed for his own acting, saw clearly the significance and the importance of what he had beheld. He called the whole performance "very individual,"—"quelque-chose de très particulier."

THE NEWSPAPER VARIETY-SHOW

It is this aspect of the variety-show, its supplying opportunities to ambitious performers for artistic development, and its own spontaneous generation of dramatic forms capable of being lifted into literature—it is this aspect of the variety-show which would be emphasized by any competent writer undertaking to narrate its long and involved history. That no one has yet written a history of the variety-show is as surprising as that no one has yet written a history of negro-minstrelsy. The materials for such a book are accessible and abundant.

It may be that the future historian will be moved to point out the superficial likeness between the variety-show and the Sunday issues of certain American newspapers. These Sunday newspapers are really magazines, that is to say, they occupy a position midway between journalism and literature, just as the variety-show occupies a position midway between the circus or the animal-exhibition and the drama. The magazine pages of these Sunday newspapers set before their readers a variegated bill of fare; they provide photographs of recent events—which are the equivalent of the moving-pictures of the variety-show; they contain short stories—which are in narrative what the brief plays of the variety-show are in dialogue and action; they abound in anecdotes and in comic sayings—which are closely akin to the utterances of the sidewalk-conversationalists of the variety-show.

And the variety-show itself is like journalism, in that it is a modern combination of elements of the remotest antiquity, for although the actual newspaper is only two or three centuries old, there were always channels by which news was conveyed to the eager public. The men of Athens nearly two thousand years ago were glad to hear and to tell some new thing, and somehow or other their wants were supplied, even if there was in classical antiquity and in the middle ages no organization faintly anticipating the marvelous machinery for collecting and distributing the information possessed by the newspapers of the twentieth century.

A MINIATURE MONTE CARLO

Every Season Gay Little Enghien, Where Gambling Is Taken More Lightly Than at Tragic Monte Carlo, Becomes More Popular

WHEN the season at the great watering places is ended, and the Paris autumn races have begun, people of fashion who remain in the country through the golden days of autumn turn for diversion to Enghien-les-Bains. There the season is at its height until the end of October, when the smart world is ready to return to town life. The bad weather of the past summer, so fatal to many resorts, has drawn an unusually large portion of the traveling public to the pretty, white-walled Casino which, built on the edge of a charming lake, seems actually to rise from the waters.

Because of its nearness to Paris, it is easy for strangers passing through to visit this miniature Monte Carlo which each season becomes more popular, and from the many châteaux in the neighborhood it is nothing to motor to Enghien for a royal dinner in the famous Negresco restaurant on the Casino terrace overhanging the lake. During the late autumn evenings, which are of a mildness peculiar to this sheltered valley, the wide windows and doors are thrown open to the stars and the moon which are reflected in the calm water. In the afternoon the warm sunlight floods the terrace where tea is served, and after dinner no one pretends to resist the attractions of the gaming rooms below.

ALL GOOD AMERICANS GO TO ENGHIE

Some time during the season most well-known Americans, drawn by the soft climate, natural scenery, and healing waters, pay their respects to this attractive suburb of Paris. One afternoon of a race day Mrs. George Gould was seen at the Casino, wearing a smart costume of black brocaded satin, with a deep, square white collar and a high Directoire stock and jabot of fine, white Malines lace; white feathers trimmed her tricorne hat which was covered smoothly with black velvet. One of the younger members of her party was charming in a Directoire coat-costume of mustard-colored velours de laine trimmed with black satin and large, black, satin-covered buttons; under the flaring brim of her black velvet hat was tucked a large, pink silk rose.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, dining one evening in the restaurant, was noticeable in a long coat-costume of white velvet trimmed with white fox fur. From the wide, wrinkled belt of black chiffon fell one long, heavily fringed end. Her white velvet hat was trimmed with black paradise feathers sweeping low from under a large buckle of black jet. Mrs. Moore, widely known as a Franco-American, comes yearly to Enghien, and combines the virtues of the sulphur baths with earnest play. The elegance of a fête and dinner which she gave last season on the terrace restaurant is still remembered.

A TITLED DEVOTEE OF FORTUNE

It is not a common thing to see a Duchess of France among the habitués of a public gaming house, but all through the last two seasons the young, beautiful Duchess de la Rochefoucauld, née Mitchell, has been one of the most devout worshippers of Dame Fortune. Nightly, her charmingly piquant face attracts attention, and above the confused sounds at the crowded table rises her flute-like voice as she calls out "Non!" or "Cartel!" according to the demands of the game. Always gowned in black, which becomingly sets off her delicate complexion and auburn hair, she is pointed out to every new arrival as "the American duchess devoted to play."

At the dinner hour of the day of the Grand Prix d'Automne, prominent French and American women in resplendent gowns, wraps, and furs in the very latest mode made a brilliant showing in the terrace restaurant. Vivid touches of colors were used on most of these costumes at throat and belt, in slender panels, and long, single sash ends. Sometimes the bright color was veiled by laces; sometimes it revealed itself unabashed in linings, collars, and revers.

The strange, exotic beauty of Polaire was wonderfully gowned in dull Indian reds and yellows like those in the pictures Besnard painted last year in India. The slender, supple Liane de Lancy was clad in brilliant red. This sprightly young woman adds to her fame by appearing in a smart new costume nearly every night; she enjoys quite frankly the interest she excites, and obligingly passes and repasses, that none of the details may be lost on the observers.

It is interesting to the European traveler who follows the fashionable seasons, to note the number of faces grown familiar from constant meeting.

It is evident that a large class of men and women, mostly women, however, follow the hazardous occupation of gambling for a living. With splendid, overpowering Monte Carlo there seems always associated the tragic interest of wrecked fortunes and suicides, but the gay little Enghien Casino, resting cozily on the bosom of the tranquil lake sans gêne et sans ennui, exhales an atmosphere of peace. The informal entrance into the cheery room—lounge, smoking room, café, and reading-room, all in one—the vestibule to the play-rooms beyond through which constantly flit pretty women exchanging gay greetings, make one forget that under this pleasant mask chafes the same spirit of recklessness and greed for easy gains as possesses the frequenters of the more famous gambling resorts. Indeed, the present season has been marked by several sensational suicides. A well-known Berlin lawyer spending a holiday at Enghien lost at play all the money he could control, borrowed in the hope of retrieving his fortunes, lost again, then leaving directions regarding his effects at the hotel, went to Paris and jumped into the Seine.

The last recorded suicide was not so considerate of the Casino's reputation, and ended his life close by. He was a Hindoo pearl broker who a short time before had disappeared from Paris with a fortune in gems belonging to his clients. His hopes of becoming rich on this stolen capital were not realized; luck failed him from the start, and his suicide soon followed.

LESS HECTIC AMUSEMENTS

Besides the dangerous joys of the gaming tables the Casino administration provides more healthful attractions which appeal to young and old. In the little theatre of the Casino the new plays and operas of the Paris season are given regularly by favorites of the Paris playhouses. The lake, too, plays an enormous part in the lavish entertainment offered to visitors. Mimic naval warfares, resplendent with fireworks, are waged here; evenings of Venetian fêtes with illuminated boats are held, and the surrounding park is made brilliant with illuminations. During the last several seasons the week of aviation has drawn great crowds. Every afternoon and evening a band plays in the delightful Rose Garden which faces the lake. The circuit of the lake is a pleasant walk before the morning visit to the spring. The race course is not too far away for a good walk, but is far enough to offer an excuse for a drive. Inside the Parc du Thermal are the tennis courts. The pleasant Hôtel des Bains is likewise inside the grilled walls of the Parc. The back windows and doors open into green and flowering spaces, while the front windows face the lake and the Rose Garden.

Children are provided for also; the pretty Kursaal across the street from the Casino is generally given up to special entertainments for them—guignols, garandoles, fancy dress parties, and balls.

HOME OF ROYALTIES AND CELEBRITIES

The sulphur water of Enghien, discovered in 1766, come from a dozen springs, all extremely strong in sulphur. Near these baths are fitted with the conveniences for different treatments. At one time a project was formed to erect a great hospital for consumptives, but the plan was so vigorously opposed that it was abandoned.

The Kursaal, the Villa Villemessant, was the home of the famous Villemessant who founded "Le Figaro" and was known as "the most capricious of editors who ever catered to the most capricious of publics." Until his death he helped to make Enghien the resort of literary as well as fashionable Parisians. Indeed, Enghien and the adjoining hamlets have had an interesting literary history for centuries. Near the lake have lived and visited kings, queens, and members of royal families.

In the neighborhood is the Château de la Chevrette, where lived Mme. d'Epinay, surrounded by a court of admirers—famous littérateurs and encyclopedists. In her day this château was already famous as the scene of splendid fêtes given in honor of the young King Louis XIV and his mother, Anne of Austria. The little château de St. Leu, where lived Queen Hortense, has been destroyed, but on the border of the lake still stands the villa of the Princess Mathilde, niece of the first Napoleon, free-thinker, artist, and philosopher. This famous woman, disliking the Empress Eugénie and her frivolous court, made her home here, receiving with royal dignity the historians, novelists, actors, artists, and warriors of her day. Not far away, at the Château d'Ormeson, George Sand wrote "Indiana," her first romance, while living herself a romance with Hules Sandeau. Though she did not love the country, she agreed with Alexander Dumas's description of the "beauties of the lake edged with gardens filled with roses, jasmine, and dahlias, and surrounded with Gothic châteaux, Italian villas, and cozy English cottages."

MUSHROOM CULTURE

A Table Delicacy Edible and Growable
at Any Season, that Well Repays for the Care Required in Cultivating

THERE is a fine opportunity for profit and pleasure in the culture of the well-known mushroom, Agaricus Campestris. That the demand for this dainty has never been met by the supply is evidenced by the high prices maintained for them all the year around. Mushrooms are just as good eating in summer as in winter. Their scarcity is due to the fact that they require a care and attention that few people are willing to give.

It would be folly to say that anyone can successfully grow mushrooms, for it is in some cases impossible to obtain the first requisite, the maintenance of a regular temperature. But those who can accomplish this can easily meet the other requirements. The work is not even beyond the province of the average woman, and the expense is very small in proportion to the returns. But aside from the purely commercial aspect of the matter, why should not a few be grown for the private table?

THE PLACE TO GROW THEM

Mushrooms can be successfully grown in a variety of places, such as sheds, barns, stables, abandoned mines, but there is none better than a cool cellar. A green-house for such cool-growing plants as violets provides an ideal mushroom bed under the benches.

After the proper place has been decided upon, all else depends upon the grower. There are certain definite rules which must be rigidly adhered to if success is to be certain. The cellar should be well under ground so that it will not be susceptible to sudden changes of temperature, and the portion of it to be used should not have a heating-plant in it. The crop does not require any sunshine, and will do best in a half-light. In many homes there is a room partitioned off from the main cellar for storing winter fruits and vegetables, that keeps an equable temperature the year around.

PREPARING THE SOIL

Fresh horse manure—old or rotted will not do—mixed with the proper amount of soil is the compost used. When the manure is received it should be put in piles three feet thick, and if fresh and soft it should be stamped or "tamped" to get it as hard as possible. If it is dry it must be well soaked with hot water, but care must be taken not to make it soggy. In all the operations of mushroom-growing, use water with great care, or if possible, not at all, as an over-supply will in some stages prove fatal. If the manure is fresh from the stable, and piled very compactly, there will be no need for watering. It will be more easy in some cases to pack the manure in boxes, and press it down with a "tamper," which is a block of wood measuring eight by ten inches with a handle inserted in the side.

After the packed manure has stood for three days, it should be thoroughly torn apart and all the lumps broken up. This can best be done with an ordinary garden weeding-fork. This process of alternately tamping and unpacking must be repeated for three days. Good judgment, however, must be exercised during this time. The period of three days may have to be varied a little, as no two lots of fresh manure are exactly alike, and three days is merely an average time. If the manure contains much nitrogen and animal matter, it will take less time, but if it does not, more time will be required. It should be made to ferment without burning. It must be watched closely; if whitish spots appear, it is burning, and a little warm water should be sprinkled sparingly on the spotted portions.

At the end of three weeks, if this process has been properly carried out, the material will be warm, moist, and greasy to the touch, and will have lost its fierce heat. It is then ready to be mixed with one-fourth its bulk of soil, and be put into the beds, which should be fourteen inches thick when the mass is tamped solid. The soil should be free from raw clay or sand, and should be obtained, if possible, from an old truck-patch, or from old green-house beds, which are sure to be well filled with decayed vegetable matter. Soil from new ground which has just been cleared has a large percentage of leaf-mold and is very good. Whatever kind is used, it should be black, loamy, loose, and friable. It is very important to turn the soil and manure together until they are thoroughly mixed. When the material is of the even temperature desired, it gives up its heat slowly and remains suitable for the spawn for months—if the temperature of the cellar in which it is located is kept even. This can be accomplished with a little effort.

THE BEST KIND OF SPAWN

The best kind of spawn must be used for mushroom culture; otherwise the advantages of the foregoing process will be lost. The "spawn," as it is technically called, is the seeds or spores of the mushroom plant, which are enclosed in some proper medium in which they can retain their vitality.

Of the three kinds of spawn on the American market, the best known is the imported "Milltrack" spawn, which is most favored by the commercial growers. Six bricks will plant a bed three feet wide by twenty feet long, and may be bought for $1.

When a thermometer inserted in the bed marks 82 degrees and remains constant, the spawn may be planted. The bricks are then marked in ten equal portions, and broken apart. The pieces, at intervals of a foot each way, are pressed down about two inches into the compost of the beds and the holes are filled up with soil. All light should be excluded except a slight glimmer, and the bed let alone for two weeks. If, after that period, white, thread-like cells, called mycelium, appear through the compost, the grower can be assured that all is well, and the beds are ready for "casing."

THE MUSHROOMS APPEAR

The casing consists of giving the beds a top covering of three inches of good soil, first screening it to remove all lumps and rubbish. It should be pleasantly moist when put on, and no water will be needed if the air in the room or cellar is kept between 53 and 60 degrees Fahrenheit. If the top of the soil becomes dry for an inch or more, water not less than 80 degrees Fahrenheit in temperature may be sprinkled over it.

Five weeks after the bed has been cased we may look for the first mushrooms. It may be a little longer, but some should show by then. When once started, they will come rapidly for five or six months, and at frequent intervals for a year or more. Mushrooms should be gathered as soon as they attain the desired size. They are edible from the button stage.

"Hurrah! My Ives Train Is Bully"

BOYS all say that an Ives Miniature Railway System for Christmas, for birthdays—or for any other day—is "just dandy."

Ives Toys

The Cooking Question

becomes a little more troublesome with the advent of colder weather when appetites are keener and the body calls for foods that are warm and nourishing.

Shredded Wheat

is not only ready-cooked and ready-to-serve, but it has in it the heat-making, strength-giving elements that fortify the body against the chilly days of Autumn. Nothing so satisfying and sustaining for breakfast in Fall or Winter as Shredded Wheat with baked apple and cream. Also deliciously nourishing with canned or preserved fruits.

Shredded Wheat Biscuit is made only at Niagara Falls in the cleanest, finest food factory in the world. By this process of manufacture—which is covered by forty-one patents—all the rich, body-building material in the whole wheat grain is retained and made digestible.

AS SEEN BY HIM

and interesting. However, the Horse Show is a good place for some debutantes to be exhibited, for some new people to come forward and have a week of glory with their names and those of their guests in the newspapers once a day, for Lander's band to play new tunes, for all the milliners and hat makers in their best array to show themselves on the "clothes walk" and in the boxes. Sometimes at this exhibition people are resurrected who seem to retire or to be shelved away until the next year's show.

Perhaps the box holders this year will sit still, perhaps they will pay visits to each other. Of course, there will be the row of people from out of town, and plainer "folk"—this is the word for them—all in their best, walking round and round, and country cousins and others who might as well live in the wilds as far as fashionable society is concerned, being guided through the mysteries by some friend or poor relation or hanger-on of the elect who points out to their admiring and wondering inspection (as if these elect were wax work) the notables in the seats of the mighty. And you read all about it the next day in the papers.

"HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL"

Then the first night of the Metropolitan Opera!—the same people, with a few exceptions, who were in the parterre boxes last year, again splendid in silks and satins and velvets and brocades and diamonds and pearls and tiaras and stomachers and bare shoulders and necks, thin and fat, against a background of men immaculately groomed. Oh, there may be here and there some slight change in the personnel, and, of course, everyone can wonder who will occupy the Astor box, and whether or not the tenor—who no doubt will be Caruso—will be in good voice, but that first night will be very much as other first nights.

And then, when all this is over, debutantes will have their continuous-performance teas and receptions, there will be the Junior Cotillion to which Mrs. Arthur Dodge with her charming personality lends great brilliancy, and then the other dances. Names and gowns—gowns and names!

Perhaps this year the rage for fancy dress dances will continue and perhaps we shall have a Chinese revival. There is always this element of hope. There is no doubt that much is expected of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, and that little set of "New York Souls." Also we can hope that during the short winter season, some stellar celebrity—other than M. André de Fouquières who is to give talks on etiquette, or the other gentleman whose name I have forgotten, but who has been lecturing on philosophical subjects in London and Paris—will visit us. Outside of this there cannot be much change. There can be no other programme for us. This is our chalk path. The only sidestepping will be, possibly, modified turkey or horse trots or some other such pretty little specialty.

OUR DUBIOUS ARISTOCRACY

Now that I have given the programme, is there anything that I can add? All this routine is necessary for the maintenance of position, and the latter is in itself attained and kept up only by success, present or past, of business transactions. Perhaps we have an aristocracy of blood—perhaps! I know that I shall offend some people mortally by pointing out that even those who claim social prestige in virtue of ancestry have something far more substantial than claim of blue blood to perpetuate their names. I think that I mentioned before, that once when I was opening an old book, there fell from between the leaves a slip of paper on which was written in a cramped, ladylike hand—the fashion of a half a century ago—a number of names. It was a list compiled by a debutante for her coming-out party. The guests were most carefully selected—this was before the days of the Social Register—from the ultra best in New York society. Fifth Avenue and its neighboring streets were represented almost as far up as Madison Square, but the truly elect lived around Bond Street and not a few even in Bleecker and some over on Second Avenue. Heaven help us!—the young woman who penned that list is an old one now and I doubt if a half dozen of the Newport set know her and the names—they have simply disappeared, many of them, although there are a few which have lived through the half century. Forty years seems a short time for so many to be lost even to memory, but even in that day, another list compiled by the young lady's grandmother would have seemed just as strange and would have been just as full of utterly unknown names.

WE ARE OUR OWN BEST TEACHERS

But away with recollections of the past! We live for the present and we make the future. New York is large, and it has room for many possibilities—those who are coming up. Of course, the parvenu of twenty years ago is largely a tradition, but even in that much abused stage institution, the Harlem flat, there are aspirations; the shop girl wants to have "class," as she calls it, and she studies faithfully what the other half—the great stars of the social stage—are doing. Some day she will be coming up.

And perhaps, after all, this publicity in the press is a missionary work, as well for us as for our imitators. Here is food for thought. When—which will be shortly—Newport and Bar Harbor and even the Horse Show and the opera and the semi-public resorts such as the best restaurants appear in moving pictures with the names of the principal personages given and a lecturer, human or mechanical, to accompany the performance by short anecdotes of the lives, habits, customs, and pedigrees, as well as of wealth of the cast—well, we shall have object lessons which will soon wipe out all vulgarity. The second generation now is quite au fait because those who have had the start have put aside some conventions and are meeting the others half way.

This winter we are to welcome a few new belles and hostesses and extend a cordial greeting to older ones. It sometimes makes me feel a little, just a very little aged when I see the girls with whom I danced a short time ago, and at whose weddings I drank health and happiness and prosperity, bringing out girls of their own.

When a Man Goes Shopping

For Christmas gifts, his energy, as a rule, is sadly misdirected. The really wise man will run a careful eye over the next Vogue before he tries to buy any Christmas present for any woman. Then, if the prospect of daring the holiday shops is too alarming, he can let Vogue act as his purchasing agent. There will be no dismal errors of judgment, if the gift is chosen from the next Vogue; there will be no lateness of delivery if Vogue buys the gift and attends to the transportation. Read the Christmas Gifts Number (on sale November 25th) and the Christmas problem will be a problem no longer.

Reduce or Increase Your Weight— Improve Your Health— Perfect Your Figure

Become my pupil and I will make you my friend. Devote fifteen minutes daily to my system and you can weigh what Nature intended. You can reduce any part of your figure burdened with superfluous flesh or build up any part that is undeveloped. The effect of my system can be concentrated on your hips, waist, limbs or any other portions of your body.

My system tends to make a figure perfectly proportioned throughout—a full, rounded neck; shapely shoulders, arms and legs; a fine, fresh complexion; good carriage with erect poise and grace of movement.

You Can Improve Your Health

My system stimulates, reorganizes and regenerates the entire body. It helps transform the food into good rich blood. It strengthens your heart, lungs and other organs, conquering all weaknesses and disorders, and generating vital force.

My latest book, "The Body Beautiful," should be read by every woman and I will send it to you free. It explodes the fallacy that lack of beauty or health cannot be avoided. In it I explain how every woman can be VIGOROUS, HEALTHY and ATTRACTIVE.

I have practised what I teach. In childhood I was puny and deformed. I have overcome all weaknesses by my own natural drugless methods. Millions of people have seen in me a living demonstration of my unique system of health culture and body-building. If you are weak, nervous, fat, thin, unshapely, tired, lacking vitality or in any other respect not at your very best, I can surely be of service to you.

My Guarantee

With my free book, "The Body Beautiful," which is fully illustrated with photographs of myself explaining my system, I give full particulars of my Guarantee Trial Plan, whereby you can test the value of my instruction without risking a single penny.

Send two-cent stamp for "The Body Beautiful" and Trial Plan to-day.

A-SHOPPING in LONDON

Pretty Trifles for the Boudoir and the Theatre-Goer, Novelties from the Jeweler, in Short, Femininities Galore

IN the London shops trifles for beautifying the boudoir are more than usually attractive this season. One well-known firm is the exponent of sachets which are used, not as heretofore, to hide away among lace handkerchiefs or filmy veils, but to spread about the room and make fragrant the air. Of the two sizes made, the larger may be used as a small pillow on which to cradle the head when taking a siesta or it may be tied with several soft satin ribbons to the back of an easy chair. The case of the sachet is square, with one corner turned down like an envelope. It is made of the finest white muslin lined with a contrasting color, and tied with a knot of ribbon to match the lining. Instead of being stuffed with the usual wadding, the pillow contains a pot-pourri mixture of dried rose petals, lavender flowers, syringa blossoms, jasmine, thyme, and rosemary, and the case bears the inscription "Memories of an Old Garden." Price, 2s. 6d.

The bolster-shaped sachet has a variety of uses. It can be utilized as a roll for veils, or stood on the dressing table as a pin-cushion, or it can be lightly tacked to the hem of casement curtains to weight them, and when the breeze blows through the window it brings the fragrance of pansies. The bolster sachets are made of Holland linen, with the inscription "Here's pansies, that's for thoughts," and embroidered at each end is a purple or a yellow pansy. These are priced as low as one shilling each. Bags of rosemary, with the inscription "Here's rosemary for remembrance," may also be bought to stand about the room.

NOVELTIES FROM THE SILVERSMITH

Several novelties are shown by the silversmiths and jewelers. A neat little roll of papier poudré in a silver case with a mirror fitted at one end is practical for the shopping bag and costs 16s. 6d. A gold case, which combines the old order with the new, holds on one side six of the finest, gold-tipped cigarettes and on the other a pocket for a miniature powder puff and mirror; the price of this is £7 10s.

Moonstones are much in demand just now. The old saying "Wear a moonstone and the sun will come out" gives the stone an especial fitness for Londoners. This simple crystal holds a mingling of delicate colors and is not only beautiful, but inexpensive as well.

Even when set with diamonds, jewelry can be bought at a reasonable figure. A most fairylike necklace consists of a fine silver chain from which depend five pendants of varying size, formed of a delicate wreathing of ivy leaves about a moonstone; the price is only £3, 16s. 6d. A pair of diamond and moonstone earrings may be bought for £4, 10s., or if the moonstones are combined with amethysts a pair of earrings in the long drop design will cost only 3 guineas. A dainty pendant for young girls consists of a large and a small moonstone set in a twisted frame of silver; price, 16s. 6d.

FOR THEATRE-GOERS

Some dainty theatre bags are to be seen at one of the specialty shops. They are priced at 25 shillings. One in silver gray brocade is sewn with tiny pearls, another in shot brown and gold is embroidered in steel, and each bears a fan to match. The same firm is selling leather-bound books with gilt corners, and these run the familiar gamut of Address Books, Accounts, At Home Days, and also provide some novelties such as Motor Trips and Dinner Party Records. The prices range from 6s. 6d. upwards, according to the size of the book. They can be bought in any color.

A well-known fan shop is offering glove fans—miniature, hand-painted creations put up in boxes and just the right size to slip into the palm of the glove. One small model painted with tiny Dresden figures with hand-carved mother-of-pearl sticks is priced at 2 guineas. Another with ivory sticks is only 1 guinea. Of course, they are merely ornamental as the tiny puff of air they induce is almost nil, but seen hanging from the wrist by a fine gold or silver chain they look delightfully feminine and frivolous.

PETTICOATS AND OTHER FRILLS

One cannot chat of dainty feminine things and neglect to mention the latest petticoat. This is of soft white satin with a knee-deep flounce of fine French lace, which has the pattern picked out in pearls and paste. The skimpiness of the modern flounce is marvelous, and although the lace flounce of this skirt is veiled again in flesh-pink chiffon there is no bulkiness.

Another dainty model is made of alternate flounces of white chiffon and fine white lace. It seems extraordinary how little room this garment takes up in spite of all its foaming frills. On the bottom frill is lightly sewn a trailing wreath of pale pink chiffon roses with pale green leaves. It is priced at 45s. 9d.

Boudoir caps are more popular than ever. The Dutch model has been replaced by more original designs. The curtain cap is the most popular of the new models. It is built on the style of the old mob cap, but with a deep frill at the back like that on a sun bonnet. Another boudoir cap is cut much on the lines of head-dresses worn by the Nursing Sisters of the English Army. It is a rather nun-like arrangement as if a large handkerchief had been folded point to point. This cap is made of fine, hemstitched lawn and trimmed with colored velvet ribbons held in position by a dull enamel buckle.

Crème Nerol

MME. FREMSTAD'S LETTER:

CRÈME NEROL is the best cream I have ever used and I cannot think of doing without it for stage and private use.

The distinguishing qualities of Crème Nerol, aside from its rare excellence as a beautifier of the complexion, are its absolute FRESHNESS and freedom from Preservatives.

Not a drop of preservative enters into the making of this wonderfully efficacious cream, as CRÈME NEROL is NOT made to sell in drug and department stores. Each and every order is filled with delightful, freshly made cream and mailed direct to the user.

CRÈME NEROL softens, whitens, refines and beautifies the most sallow, rough or impaired complexion, and as a cleanser of those minute safety valves of the skin (the pores) it is unequalled. It most positively will not promote a growth of hair.

Its tonic effect upon the relaxed facial muscles and the attendant flabby condition (the cause of all lines and wrinkles) is most pronounced.

What Crème Nerol has done for others it will do for you.

A R T

THE Third Special Exhibition of the Society of Illustrators was held in October and November at the National Arts Club. Drawings in every medium that modern printing processes permit were exhibited; two hundred and sixty-one numbers made up the extensive catalogue.

Good illustration reflects as in a mirror the ideas of the writer. Herein lies the essential difference which sets the illustrator apart from other artists. The latter should be individual; the former, like an actor, must be able to render the impressions of the author.

There are among illustrators both conformists and non-conformists, willing or unwilling, as the case may be, to wear color glasses that direct their sight. There are many good illustrators in the Society of Illustrators, but there are not many artists. The author who regulates the color of the glasses his illustrator wears may consider himself fortunate, for an artist who is a critic and superior to the writer in his knowledge of life, may put the cart before the horse and make of first importance the pictures which exist but to enhance the book. The pictures of this showing have not proved that inspiration is to be gained from our literature, unless, indeed, our illustrators were diverted by problems of technical perfection. Technique was indeed the virtue of the showing. It started out at the spectators everywhere along the walls, and showed conclusively that if our illustrators have mastered nothing else, they have at least mastered the mechanics of their craft.

AMONG THOSE PRESENT

Five compositions by Arthur I. Keller were illustrations for Anna Katherine Green's story, "Kennedy Square," "The Confession," "L'Enfant Prodigue," and "Her First Problem." The over-brilliant technique of these drawings tended rather to cloud than to elucidate their themes.

Worth Brehm showed a delightful arrangement of men seated at a table. The contributions of Harrison Cady and Arthur Young were perhaps the most individual in the collection. Both are inventors. Mr. Cady in his own minute manner tells many little stories in one picture; Mr. Young tells one, but that with a force that, amid the neighboring pictures, seemed almost brutal.

Joseph Clement Coll is represented by five decorative designs in ink that evidence a debt to Aubrey Beardsley. Graham Cootes and Clyde Squires uphold the pretty style of illustration. "Future Citizens," by Reuter Dahl, is handled with his accustomed suave ability in the managing of contrasting values and simple masses. There were posters by Robert Wildhack, and one by Louis Fancher—"Sumurun"—that was simple and graceful. James Montgomery Flagg, Deman Fink, and Will Foster answer the modern call for simplicity, which, however, is too much a formula with them to endow their work with vitality. Three pictures by Charles Dana Gibson show that the work of this prolific illustrator is, as ever, photographically true to life.

A Pierrot "Bonsoir," by Earl Stetson Crawford, has much of the graceful spirit of France. May Wilson Preston and Wallace Morgan lend a much needed note of humor to the exhibition. F. B. Masters continues to make railroad engines talk, and Joseph Pennell appears here as if by accident.

WHAT IS WORTH SEEING

Drawings by old masters which covered a wide range of time, place, and subject were shown at Keppel's from October 15th to November 2nd. They were by Campagnola, Hans Sebalt Lautensack, Jan Wierix, Goltzius, Dumonstier, Van Uden, Van Goyen, Van Dyck, Dirck Van Delen, Rembrandt, Van Everdingen, Claes and Cornelius Visscher, Naeuwincx, Backhuizen, Pieter Molyn the Elder, Claude Lorraine, Jan Both, De Bisschop, Vitringa, Thomas Rowlandson, Hulswit, Wilkie, and Bonington.

Eleven painters show pictures at the Katz Gallery. George H. Macrum with "Spring Morning," "High Bridge," and "Lower New York," leads the group in sanity which has become a virtue in these days of Post-Impressionists and Futurists. Mr. Macrum is blind to so many sordid aspects of life that he might be called a purist. He paints calm things with a calm brush that is never hurried and is always accurate. His "Lower New York," contrasted with reality, is a shock. It presents straight and still buildings and straight and still people, so that one wonders where he could have recruited them in our vulgarly animated city. Names on the other canvases are Chichester, Goddard, Cochran, Walter Goltz, Selden, J. F. Carlson, Mrs. Bullard, McFee, F. S. Chase, and C. B. Cook. The majority of these painters have still to climb the ladder to popular favor. John F. Carlson paints lacework patterns of trees against a blue haze with genuine grace and mastery.

The Augustin Daly collection of portraits of eminent men and women of the stage will be shown at the Anderson Galleries from November 16th to November 27th; it is then to be sold at auction. The collection includes Kitty Clive, Nell Gwynn, Mrs. Cibber, Mrs. Siddons, Garrick, Cooke, Wallace, Booth, Forrest, Salvini, Mme. Janauschek, Adelaide Neilson, Charlotte Cushman, and a number of later-day stars.

"Interpretations of New York," by George Luks, John Sloan, George Bellows, Guy du Bois, William Clackens, and Jerome Myers were shown in October and November at the Folsom Gallery. There, ideas held the reins while style trotted this way and that.

Smooth, Unbroken Lines is the Reward for Wearing the Trade A. P. Brassiere Mark

Directoire

The A. P. Brassiere harmonizes the whole figure. Beginning above the bust, it smooths out wrinkles, fills the hollows, and evens out the ridges appearing at the top of the corset. If the bust is large, it helps to get rid of this appearance. If it is undeveloped, it builds up the bust—fills up the irregularities and the gown hangs perfectly, being furnished with a real foundation.

Prices from 50 cents to $25.00. A large range of materials. Some models have shields attached to the arms.

shimmering with a greenish-blue scale decoration, distinguished the final scene of naughty Anatol's complex love affairs.

"But who is the mermaid?" queried Ann, and truly the description was apt, for pretty Isabelle Lee with her iridescent sequins and her red-gold hair looked indeed a veritable "lady from the sea." Her exquisite gown showed the new cross-over effect on the skirt and the slash. There was a negligible train. The low bodice was trimmed with a sequin garniture matching that of the tunic; a similar decoration supported the black gourah feather in the high coiffure. A satin wrap of emerald green gave a flash of brilliant color to her thoroughly dramatic exit.

THE BEST STAGE GOWNS

We were especially enthusiastic over the gowns of "Within the Law," and Jane Cowl's appearance in them. One was a bewitching afternoon frock of pale gray-blue charmeuse made with a yoke bodice, long, full kimono sleeves attached to close cuffs, and a peplum showing only at the back. The slashed skirt disclosed a white silk petticoat on the left side. The draped tunic, plastron, and Robespierre collar of white shadow lace, and the black velvet hat faced with white plush, and trimmed with a white feather brush over one ear, were the picturesque features. The other gown was a rare and lovely toilette of Copenhagen blue, velvet-brocaded crêpe with purple flowers at the left of the corsage. This was revealed by an evening wrap of golden brown velvet lined with pea-green chiffon, and trimmed with skunk fur. "Adorable color blend," said Ann.

"The last word in wraps," she whispered at sight of Sallie Fisher's fascinating entrance costume in "The Woman Haters." The skirt of lavender crêpe meteor was worn with one of the new, half-length, draped wraps of fuchsia velvet, finished at the dolman sleeves with taupe marabou, and caught with a rhinestone clasp. A smart, round hat to match was decked with one superb, lavender-tipped feather.

The new silhouette, which she has adopted, was more plainly visible in a lovely satin ball-gown of flesh-pink, edged on the double tunics with deep scallops. The lower one was bordered with gold bullion fringe, and the upper one, as well as the manteau de cour, was embroidered and fringed with steel and amethyst beads. There was a Juliet cap of sparkling white beads with flesh-pink feathers on the side.

"You see, the large waist is imperative!" gloated Ann. "Sooner or later we must all come to that figure, if we would be in the mode."

The MODERN PANDORA'S BOX

gold and fastened with a button clasp. This perfume, "Natoma," is shown on page 39 and costs $5.25 a bottle.

Quite different is a heavy, languorous rose perfume, shown at the lower left on page 39 suggesting midsummer odors. Price, $2.35 to $4.75. This is one of a series which includes toilet water, face powder, and a delicious talcum powder put up in a glass jar with French gilt shaker top. The latter is of palest rose tint and is unique among talcums. Price, 75 cents.

A gay little box of orange and flame-colored satin, shown second from the top at the right of page 39, holds a wonderfully decorated bottle that suggests the enticing nature of its contents. Flowers are carved on the bottle and on the stopper, and the carving and lettering are enameled in a soft red. The front of the bottle is decorated with a raised gold figure dancing before a red mill. This design is by a well-known artist whose signature is on every bottle. The contents are worthy of their rich casing. The price is $10 a bottle.

Another bouquet odor, rather heavy in character, but with a certain freshness not usually found in these languorous scents, is enclosed in a square, cut-glass bottle set in a satin-lined box. The illustration at the upper right-hand corner of page 39 shows this attractive shape. This perfume has been the rage in Paris during the past season. The price is $4.75 a bottle.

One of the most alluring of the recent importations, and one which promises to become fashionable, is a bouquet odor of elusive suggestion, costing $4.65.

The same delicious perfume can be had in a toilet water that has a wonderfully refreshing effect when used for a perfume sponge after the bath. A small velvet sponge is dipped in tepid water and partially wrung out; then a generous amount of the toilet water is sprinkled over it, and the sponge is rapidly drawn over the body to saturate every pore with sweetness.

"L'Eveil," a perfume heavy enough to be individual, yet delicate enough to be in good taste, is held in a crystal bottle with an inset porcelain relief in pale mauve. The bottle stands in an odd-shaped violet leather case lined with a lighter shade of violet; this perfume sells for $4.75. This bottle appears at the bottom of page 39.

Both the carved bottles illustrated in the upper, left-hand corner of page 38, and their contents of rare blends of perfume are very lovely. The one on the left is exquisitely carved. Price, $5.75. The other is of cut glass and costs $3.50. Two lovely rose odors in pretty bottles are shown in the opposite corner; one is an extract costing $2.40 or $4.50 a bottle, and the other a toilet water for $4.50. "Styx," a perfume in an oddly stoppered bottle of carved crystal, is priced at $12. It is shown on page 39. At the top of this same page is a delicate powder box of hand engraved glass. Filled with a fine powder, it costs $4.50.

MILADY'S PATCHES

The patch boxes illustrated on page 40 are fine examples of the Battersea enamel boxes—the rarest and most valuable of these antique feminine trinkets, the collection of which has now become something of a fad, both in this country and abroad, especially on the part of women. These boxes were all made during the late seventeenth or early eighteenth century, and the inscriptions and decorations, usually in delicate pastel shades, are hand-painted or done by the old transfer process under the glaze.

KNIT UNDERWEAR

in the New "Fine Weave" fills every need and requirement of the woman who knows what is necessary for comfort, for appearance and for solid satisfaction—both for herself and for her children.

Any woman who prefers this New "Fine Weave" underwear to the regular weave can find all Forest Mills sizes, weights and shapes duplicated in it. The "Fine Weave" underwear has the same hand crochet finish at the neck as the regular line, and is sold at the same price for the corresponding quality.

The "Fine Weave" can be had in lisle, silk lisle, wool, silk and wool, and cotton. It is made in sizes to fit every figure, is made in three weights—thin, medium and heavy—and is sold at all stores where good underwear is sold.

Note the Styles in the Margin

Dutch necks, low necks, high necks, elbow sleeves, long sleeves, short sleeves and sleeveless, knee lengths and ankle lengths, union suits, vests and tights are all to be had in both weaves, all bearing the celebrated Forest Mills trade-mark which guarantees their quality and finish.

Price 50 cents to $4.00 a garment

We will be glad to send you the Forest Mills Style book if you will write our New York Headquarters.

COLGATE'S COLD CREAM

Cleanliness Comfort Charm

Reflected in many a mirror are the clear, wholesome complexions which follow the regular use of Colgate's Cold Cream.

When it has cleaned dust-clogged pores—then you know Cleanliness.

When it has soothed winter's wind-burn—then you realize Comfort.

An attractive trial tube sent on receipt of four cents in stamps.

Makers of Cashmere Bouquet Soap—luxurious, lasting, refined.

Poses by a professional masseuse for Colgate & Company.

The Forehead—start from the center of the forehead. With both hands massage with Colgate's horizontally toward the temples, pressing gently with the fingers and using a rotary motion.

To smooth out the lines
around the nose and mouth, and for enlarged pores on the sides of the nose, massage with a rotary motion backward toward the cheeks.

gin at the point of the chin and massage with Colgate's Cold Cream downward toward the neck. This also tends to dispose of the loose flesh called "double chin."
